

AROUND & ABOUT

with Justine Weatherford

Some folks can't understand what there is to do in Heppner—how life can possibly be interesting in such a small, off-the-highway town. How I wish they had been here this last seven days—instead of going away to find something to do elsewhere.

As always during school-vacation months the fine County Museum continues open daytimes on Monday, Wednesday, Saturday, Sunday and on Thursday evening. Also there were activities at several churches every day and every evening last week.

At a special event on Thursday evening, June 16, parents, grandparents and other family members beamed with pride as the 75 youngsters enrolled in the three-Church, "Reach Out" Vacation Bible School performed and showed off their crafts. The twenty-some teachers, assistants and high school helpers who worked with the children at the five-morning school, had their pupils demonstrate part of what they had learned then, instead of on Friday the school's final day, because it seemed that too many persons planned to leave town Friday afternoon.

All week long there was a great crowd of swimmers enjoying the city pool most of each day. Pool Director Tom Franks and the crew that assists him seem to keep pretty busy, especially from 1 p.m. to about 5:30 each afternoon. I watched the operation on Tuesday, Thursday, Friday and Sunday. Notable were the two "foot" inspectors, Don and Bart Penney, who seem very careful and efficient.

The baskets clerks were friendly and helpful. What a calamity it will be if that pool closes at the end of this month—which could happen, as the pool, like the library, is only presently funded through June 30. However, it seems that swimmers and their supporters are much more vocal and active in soliciting help than library users are.

Well, so far I've considered mainly youth activities. Last Saturday saw this town really blossom. The Greenup-Walton wedding was one of the largest ever held here—with an overflow crowd at St. Patrick's and cars parked around the church for many blocks. We know that some Heppner families went to Condon to attend the Butler-Wolff wedding at St. John's Church there also.

Saturday evening, besides the dining, dancing and celebrating following the big wedding; the crowning ceremony for this year's Fair and Rodeo Queen Mary Anne Proctor and her court took place at the fairground. This annual, no-admission-charged special event is always good family fare. It was followed by the Queen's dance in the Pavilion Building. (Which hopefully was not followed by fighting that needed city, county and state police to break it up at happened the previous Saturday night.)

A good number of the HHS Class of 1967 with their wives and husbands and seven of their teachers enjoyed Saturday evening visiting, dining and dancing at the Elks Club. Many of them had also enjoyed a morning of golf together and quite a few had luncheon visits.

Sunday the big action shifted to Cutsforth Park where the Elks held their annual picnic. The Smith-Carpenter wedding at Hope Lutheran Church that afternoon, with the reception following downtown at West of Willow, involved families and friends of the principals. The Class of '67 wound down its reunion activities with a family picnic at the fairground.

So, granted, not every week and weekend is so action-filled here. However, there are four more Saturday evening Fair and Rodeo Princess Dances coming along on Saturday nights before that biggest of all weeks when the County Fair and Rodeo take over.

There are various club events and picnics scheduled for almost every weekend during the summer. This coming weekend's Masonic 100th Anniversary will draw many people here.

The county-funded museum will continue to draw praise from visitors who are so surprised at its size and its fine collections. Hopefully the city swimming pool and the public library will continue to serve their patrons.

Last Monday saw the first of this year's AAUW-arranged Library Story Hours for children from four through eight years of age. These "hours" are set for 10 a.m. each Monday when the swimming pool is regularly closed for cleaning and maintenance.

A committee of volunteers has arranged the story schedule. Children and parents of older family members should get to the library, or near the library by 10 a.m. as the storytellers like to have the group assemble before they begin—and not have children dribble in late and miss part of the day's story or program and disrupt the attention of the children who arrived on time.
