

18 booths, larger exhibits highlight fair pavillion displays

With all those good things going on out in the sunshine at the Fair, don't forget to pay a visit to the pavillion where displays include everything from canned peaches to baby bonnets.

All of the 18 community booth displays have been occupied by various organizations eager to show the community what they've been up to for the past year.

The Morrow County Wheat Growers is encouraging entries in the Wheathearts Baking Contest at the Fair. The group is offering $50 to the contest winner to help defray costs of a trip to Portland in December to test their recipe against other county winners at the wheat growers convention.

pavillion include the antique collectors' corner under the supervision of Harold and Edna Peck, the children's corner overseen by Monica Jones and the flower exhibit arranged by Delpha Jones. Also present will be the vegetable exhibit under the direction of Betty Christman, hobbies and crafts with Marlene Gray, art and photos supervised by Tana Bunch and a teen corner supervised by Lynn Gochnauer.

Ruth Bergstrom's needlework area is always a popular stop as well as Marilyn Bergstrom's clothing exhibit, Bebe Munkers canning area and the food section under the direction of Helen Currin and Sue Vinson.

Many varieties of wheat will be on display under the supervision of Bill Rawlins and D.O. Nelson and Bob Kroll will amaze the crowds with their potato collection.

Farm equipment will be on display through the courtesey of the Morrow County Grain Growers, Sperry-New Holland and Buttercreek Equipment. Diamond R and Loomix will feature cattle shutes and feed supplements while the State Forestry Dept. and the Kinzua Corp. will also contribute exhibits.

After all that looking around, you might want to purchase some leathercraft, cosmetics, stained glass or assorted food items from the booths located throughout the pavillion.
