

Still time to enroll in some BMCC spring classes

Interested persons will be able to enroll in Blue Mountain Community College evening classes through next Thursday, April 6, if the classes still have openings.

Two classes—welding and physical fitness for women—were cancelled on Monday night due to lack of students. The botany class needs at least one additional student in order to continue. This class is basically a wildflower identification course with local emphasis and field trips planned to different sites.

The status of classes scheduled for Tuesday and Wednesday were uncertain at press time, except for History of World War II which will continue with any number of students. Nancy Brownfield, BMCC coordinator for south Morrow County, said, however, it would be to the advantage of the community to fill this and every other accredited class so the college will continue to offer accredited classes in this area.

Also being offered Tuesday and Wednesday are guitar, Spanish, multi-media art and expectant parents. Persons interested in taking one of these classes should call Mrs. Brownfield, 676-5039 if they haven't registered yet.

The upholstery class begins tonight (Thursday) at 7 p.m. in the conference room at the Lexington school building.

The micro-wave cooking class originally scheduled to begin tonight will start next Thursday, April 6.

Hunt seat riding has openings for the section that will meet for the first time on Sunday, evening, April 2.

Mrs. Brownfield said pre-registration greatly increased this term and wants to thank everyone who was able to pre-register. She also said it is helpful for persons not able to pre-register to call and express an interest in a particular class.

Topic Club, Bookworms hold joint meeting

by Justine Weatherford
Evelyn Isom, Echo, provided an interesting program at the March 22 joint meeting of the Ione Topic Club and the Heppner Bookworms in St. William's Church, Ione.

Topic Club hostesses Rose Baker and Helen Proudfoot served a dessert to eight of their clubmembers and their eleven guests from the Bookworms: Lorena Jones, Marion Abrams, Frances Mitchell, Florence Green, Marian Bronnan, Helen Currin, Ruby Becket, Madge Thomson, Inez Erwin, Ella Smith and Justine Weatherford.

Mrs. Isom and her husband Bill have returned from extensive visiting with their daughter, Harriet, a U.S. State Department official, in south-central Africa. They are former Heppner residents and are well known in this area.

The Isoms brought home many slides, craft items and much current information about the two emergent countries Burundi and Rowanda which are just south of the better-known Uganda.

There are few travelers into these countries and their guest facilities are minimal. Each country has four million people although the land area of each is about as large as that of Maryland. They are very poor; coffee is their largest export.

Mrs. Isom talked of the energy crisis there—not of oil and electricity but of the shortage of wood. It seems the natives have cut so many trees just to fuel their cooking fires. She also showed slides of the skinny cattle which have already overgrazed the land.

Both of these land-locked countries enjoy the deep waters of Lake Tanganyika. Burundi has potential mineral wealth in uranium and silver; Rwanda will in time become a favorite tourist destination because of its exciting mountain areas and its great Kagira National Park.

When her parents visited her, Harriet Isom was stationed in Bujumbwa, the capital of Burundi, a city with a population of 150,000, where she was deputy chief of the U.S. mission (next in rank to the ambassador). She has quite recently been assigned to the island of Sumatra off south-east Asia where she is the principal officer at the American Consulate.
