Foods from yesteryear and from faraway places lured Senior Volunteers to Blue Mountain Community College recently. Retired Senior Volunteer Program members from the two-county area were honored for their volunteer services in their communities at the annual appreciation dinner held Sunday afternoon.

Many of those present brought heritage foods or foods they enjoyed on overseas trips they have taken. Betty Ehlers of the East Oregonian will be featuring some of the recipes on her weekly food page in the near future.

Ron Daniels, president of BMCC, was master of ceremonies.

Irene Padberg of Heppner has earned a certificate for 50 hours of service since she became an RSVP member. RSVP is a program sponsored by Blue Mountain Community College for its Senior Citizen constituents. More information on the program may be obtained from the College.

$3,000 in jewels taken from Irrigon woman

More than $3,000 worth of jewelry—most of it of the American Indian variety—was stolen last week from an Irrigon woman, Morrow County Sheriff's Department officials said.

The jewelry, ranging from a liquid silver bird fetish necklace to silver and turquoise badger paw design rings, was owned by Virginia Lee Cox of Irrigon.

Mrs. Cox had placed a case containing the jewelry in her car before driving from Irrigon to Wenatchee, Wash. When she arrived at her destination in Wenatchee, she noticed the case was missing. Where the jewelry was removed remains a mystery. A stop was made in Umatilla prior to the Cox woman's arrival in Wenatchee.

BMCC ponders effects of ballot measures 6 & 11

Ballot measures 6 and 11 were outlined in a report presented by Ron Daniels, president of Blue Mountain Community College, to the board at their regular September meeting.

Daniels explained the impact of the two property tax relief measures with special emphasis on what ballot measure no. 6 could mean to BMCC. He also gave board members a written comparison of the two measures. After studying the reports, the board planned to decide at its October meeting whether to take a position on either of the proposed measures.

Concern was voiced by board members over the impact of ballot measure 6 on local boards. Daniels noted, "There is a possibility of the state picking up part or all of the community college bill."

While the legislature would retain local boards, there will be controls on kinds of programs and class offerings a college could have, Daniels predicted. "If certain program is offered within the region, you may not be able to offer that program," he illustrated.

In other matters, the board took a look at the three options it currently has in regard to 1979-80 budget election. A wait and see position was favored by the board until after the November election when the fate of the tax relief ballot measures would be decided.

Other options open to the board would have been to try to put a tax base election or a three-year serial election levy on the November ballot. Daniels pointed out, "The problem with making an early decision would be the impact Ballot Measure 6 could have."

Prior to the meeting, board members toured the proposed student housing site. They inspected the new auto mechanics building and heard a report on its progress. On their last stop, they viewed the mural mounted on the McCrae activity center that depicts the topography of Umatilla-Morrow counties.

In other business, the board:

—Heard a brief report from Daniels on the Support Staff Classification study. The study will be examined at a later meeting.

—Heard a report from Bob Kelly, dean of instruction, on his efforts to cooperate with other institutions in the state who wish to bring continuing education programs to Umatilla-Morrow counties. He pointed to possible upper division police science courses as areas of proposed cooperation with Oregon State University and Portland State University.

—Hired Nancy Burns and Lorraine Crawford in the nursing department and Gerald DeMoss, in the business department.

—Reappointed Anna Lee Kennedy, Pendleton, and Waljy Wedin, Milton-Freewater, to the budget committee for another three-year term, expiring 1981.

The next regular BMCC board meeting will be Oct. 8 at 7:30 p.m. in Umatilla.
