

Sno-park permits are now on sale

Sno-park permits will go on sale Oct. 30 at all Motor Vehicles Division field offices.

Permits are needed to park in designated winter recreation parking areas, including lots and resorts on plowed-out areas alongside highways beginning Nov. 15. Permits are needed only where sno-park signs have been posted.

County agent gives garlic growing hints

Garlic is an excellent crop for gardeners who like to have something growing through the year. Garlic should be planted in the fall and will be ready for harvest next summer. Two types of garlic are available, according to John Nordheim, Morrow County Extension Agent.

In addition to DMV field offices, permits will be available again this year at winter recreation resorts and many sports and ski shops in the state.

An annual sno-park permit sells for $5. One-day permits sell for $1. Money collected goes to the Highway Division to cover cost of plowing parking facilities for winter sports enthusiasts. Registered snowmobile owners can get a free permit by bringing their snowmobile registration card to a DMV office.

Last year, the first permit system was used in Oregon, annual permits could be transferred from one vehicle to another. This year, the Motor Vehicles Division says permits cannot be transferred. The annual permit is smaller than last year, is blue and white, and has two adhesive strips at either end so it can be attached to the lower left corner of a car's windshield. The Winter Recreation Advisory Committee recommended the change to a non-transferable annual permit, according to the DMV.

Daily permits are green and white, and the same size as last year. They also have a small adhesive strip which is to be attached to the car's windshield. DMV believes the adhesive strips should reduce the problem some people had last year when permits were blown to the car floor or out the door when it was opened.

Sno-park permits are expected to be sold by most of the businesses that sold them last year. In addition, a DMV spokesman said the agency is attempting to get other businesses to sign agreements to sell permits. A list of these outlets will be available early next month.

Last year, $296,276 was collected by the sno-park program to pay for plowing at winter recreation sites.

Oregon sno-park permits are honored in Washington, the first state to launch the sno-park system.

stops set for

Nov. 15

High school visitations by Blue Mountain Community College faculty are continuing throughout northeast Oregon during November.

A total of 37 high schools are scheduled for visitations by faculty members as well as interested BMCC students. These representatives travel as far west as The Dalles and east as far as Joseph. In the north they visit the Milton-Freewater area and go south to the John Day region, as well as visiting all high schools in the Umatilla-Morrow county area.

Pat Loughary, dean of students at BMCC, explained, "The visits give us personal contact with students. We get a chance to answer questions on a small group basis that we would not have a chance to do in a large assembly." The college urges that the visitations take place in classes or small group settings.

The information disseminated is of two kinds including what kind of an institution Blue Mountain is and what kind of programs are offered.

"We want seniors to know who we are and what we are like," Loughary noted.

High school seniors who might miss the BMCC visit are invited to call or visit the college, Loughary added.

Janet Groat, public information coordinator and journalism instructor, will visit high schools in Heppner and Ione Wednesday, Nov. 15. Interested seniors should contact their school counseling department for exact times.
