Global food problems to be aired Sunday at Hope Lutheran Church

Already water pipes are freezing. Everyone has hunted out mittens and warm scarves. Officially this part of the world is still in autumn—winter won't arrive until Dec. 21, but when it arrives, most of us certainly hope it is no colder than the weather we are experiencing right now.

Last Thursday Anna Johnson, Ruth Nutting, Irene Swanson and I felt we had really driven through winter when we encountered eight to ten inches of snow between the Heppner-Spray Highway and Camp Five on our way to Kinzua and Fossil. The winter-beautiful woods was so like a Christmas-card picture. However, driving was difficult without snow tires or chains.

We arrived safely at the attractive home of Cheryl and Matt Greenup (she is Irene's granddaughter) just beyond Kinzua, and after a quick visit went on to the annual meeting of the Columbia Basin Electric Co-Op at Fossil. After we left Fossil where we enjoyed looking through the big mercantile store, we saw no more snow except the white stuff clinging to the bottom and sides of our car.

Because I enjoy visiting the Christmas Bazaar at the U.M. Church in Arlington, we came home that way—relishing the wonderful views as we drove north through the cold, clear miles of Gilliam County and then home south along Willow Creek.

This is Ping Pong Weekend in Heppner. Attention of sports fans will be focused on the teams representing Haiti and Thailand—both tropical countries where snow is practically unknown. The Elks Club is all set for a big Hawaiian Luau on Friday night which should bring a tropical atmosphere into this frigid area.

There are two large American Elm trees in front of our home which I bless for the shade they provide on hot summer days, but which I feel much less enthusiastic about when the millions of leaves come tumbling down. Last Friday I got up the determination to rake leaves and to trundle them to the backyard garden. After about five wheelbarrow loads were moved, I took a break and did a few errands. When I told old-time resident Ed Gonty that I had raked the leaves, he laughingly told me that the effort was unnecessary here where we have dry cold—that I was just following a habit I developed in the wet Willamette Valley.

It was so cold that I was partly persuaded by Ed's reasoning and after more raking and hauling, accompanied by lots of barking and leaf scattering assistance from my puppy, I decided to heck with moving all the leaves this year.

The Thursday before last I drove to Pendleton with four Methodist lady passengers. Before we left for home, I persuaded us to stop briefly at the Albertson Store. We all went in and several signed slips for a turkey give-away. Vicki Tollefson was later notified that she was a lucky winner of a free turkey. Last Thursday after the Columbia Basin meeting, my passenger Irene Swanson, was notified that she had won an electric appliance doorprize. Now I am beginning to feel like being the chauffeur is spoiling my luck—I don't seem to know how to combine driving with winning prizes.

Two boys, Ted and Jack, and their parents the Steve Tollefsons and the Terry Lillybridges, were the center of much attention last Sunday at the Methodist Church where a full house of Episcopalians and Methodists viewed the ceremonies of dedication and baptism.

As Thanksgiving approaches it is so evident how blessed we are to live in our friendly, caring bit of the world. This Sunday, Nov. 19, the Christian Life Center Church is arranging a community potluck dinner at the Heppner Elementary School at 1 p.m.

Father Kenneth Miller reminds us that at noon on Thanksgiving Day all are invited to come to All Saints' Church's Fellowship Hall for a festive potluck in front of the fireplace. The warm community gathering has become an annual event which cheers many who are alone for the holiday.

During this week the Senior Citizen Mealsites will be providing an extra big Thanksgiving meal on Wednesday evening.

Last Saturday those who traveled to Elgin experienced a cold, disappointing afternoon as Heppner High lost its playoff game. However the Saturday night Disco "Earthquake" Dance, with its modern music and a multitude of lights drew a good crowd to the Fair Pavilion Building. Reports are that it was very "NEAT!"

We've already mentioned that this Saturday the championship ping pong match will be held at Heppner High at 5 p.m. and will be followed by a big party at the Elks Club. Next Saturday, Nov. 25, the Soroptimists have arranged for their Turkey Trot at the Pavilion Building.

Also on Nov. 25, the Heppner Merchants will warm everyone's Christmas spirits assisted by a special visit from Santa Claus.

On Dec. 2, the big AAUW Artifactory will be on at St. Patrick's Hall with many clever, crafted gifts, books, refreshments and Christmasy items offered for sale. So, I'll be seeing you.

A special pulpit exchange and program dealing with world hunger will be presented Sunday, Nov. 19 at Hope Lutheran Church in Heppner.

Pastor John Maas said the Rev. E. David Spencer and Roger Williams, of Shepherd of the Valley Lutheran Church in Beaverton, will speak on the urban views of food supply and world hunger 12:15 p.m. Sunday. Williams is executive director of Oregon Newspaper Publishers Association.

Included in the program will be a round-table discussion aimed at sharing thoughts on hunger, that will be used by the Lutheran Church as the "grass roots" basis for continuing their program across the globe.

"Too many times the directives are laid down from the top, before the people at the bottom have a chance to express their views," said Pastor Maas. "We want to obtain thoughts and ideas from the rural resident and the city dwellers and forward them to the national office."

In addition to the afternoon program, both men will attend regular morning worship services at Hope and Valby Lutheran churches.

Steve and Cathy Peck and Don and Martha Peterson will travel to Beaverton for the day to take part in a like program at Shepherd of the Rev. Maas urged the public to attend the afternoon program. Refreshments will be served.

Valby rancher to attend World Hunger Conference

Mr. and Mrs. Don Peterson of Ione will travel to Omaha, Neb., this weekend to take part in the American Lutheran Church's World Hunger Conference. Peterson, a Valby area wheat producer, is the North Pacific District representative to the national organization. The weekend conference will serve to chart the course the American Lutheran Church will follow in efforts to abate world hunger.

All Saints to host Thanksgiving dinner

Once again this year, on Thursday, Nov. 23, several families will be cooking their Thanksgiving dinners at All Saints parish hall. They wish to invite all those who do not have family coming or who would have to eat alone to join them at 1:30 p.m. for Thanksgiving dinner. Don't wait until then preceding dinner there will be hot cider, checkers and other table games. For more information, or to help with the planning, call 676-4133 or 676-9496.
