Students visit state hospital

Practical application of psychology...

Eleven Heppner High School psychology students learned firsthand what institutional life is like for the mentally retarded, when they spent a day at Eastern Oregon State Hospital's training center in Pendleton last week.

The 11 seniors—members of Dale Conklin's psychology class—observed training methods used by hospital personnel in rehabilitating the retarded. Perhaps more important, they learned to see the retarded "more as human beings," Conklin said.

"They had lunch and visited with the patients, and the patients showed the kids their wards, where they lived, and introduced them to their friends," Conklin said.

In addition to the more human aspects of the visit, the field trip "gave the students a chance to see the practical application of areas covered in the classroom," according to Conklin.

The visit to the state hospital is an annual event for students in Conklin's psychology class.

Those making the trip were Jeff Fortenberry, Bob Miller, John Wishart, Michelle Cutsforth, Cindy Kerr, Shawna Seitz, Maureen Healy, Scott Sherer, Delbert Turner, Richard Schmidt and Howard Huddleston.
