

Cattle skin disease eliminated from Oregon county

Scabies, a skin disease of cattle, has been eliminated from the two infected Klamath County herds where it was found in December, but Oregon Department of Agriculture officials, ranchers and feedlot operators are continuing to be alert for evidence of any new cases, according to John Nordheim, Morrow County Livestock Agent. Oregon, however, is still on the list of states with outbreaks.

Dr. Glenn Rea, state veterinarian, said that the Klamath County cases have been traced to a California feedlot and a herd in that state. Oregon is presently considering whether a quarantine should be placed on cattle entering from California. Dr. Rea said a recommendation will probably be made at the Klamath Falls meeting, on Feb. 7, on whether a quarantine should be imposed. If California cattle are quarantined, Oregon will require all cattle in herds from there known to have the disease or from herds in contact with the disease, to be dipped twice before entering Oregon. The dippings would have to be under the surveillance of Oregon officials.

Cattle coming from endemic states must also be dipped at least twice at 10 to 14 day intervals in an authorized solution. Such cattle must be shipped within 10 days of the last dipping and must not have been exposed to other cattle while waiting shipment. Cattle scab is caused by the mite Psoroptes scabiei and has become widely diffused, affecting a large number of animals in some areas. The small mite burrows into the animal's skin and can cause great economic loss to cattlemen. If an animal is not treated there can be a decline in its weight and health with death resulting from secondary infections in extreme cases. Scabies is related to the other manges such as demodectic, chorioptic and sarcoptic. Differential diagnosis is done with the aid of a microscope.

Oregon's last known outbreak prior to the one in Klamath County was in 1977 at a Nyssa Feedlot. Before that Scabies was confirmed in Columbia County in 1961. Presently, standing quarantines have been placed on the states of Texas, New Mexico, Oklahoma and Colorado. In addition, California, Arizona, Wyoming, South Dakota, Kansas, Minnesota, Nebraska, Iowa and Illinois have scabies-infected areas. Cattle from these areas must not be imported without having been dipped twice, under supervision, with an approved product within a ten to fourteen day interval. The second dipping can be accomplished upon arrival in Oregon if previous arrangements with the Animal Health Division of the Oregon State Department of Agriculture.
