

Solar eclipse peeks through clouds to give Morrow Countians a once-in-a-lifetime experience

Eclipse viewers for the most part, were impressed with the "show of the century" in the Pacific Northwest and many gathered with students at area schools where supervision and viewing devices were available. In the photo above a young man takes on a "wrap-around" look with his Mylar viewers provided by Blue Mountain Community College. In the photo at lower left teacher Mary Benedict tries to cover all the bases with her class at Heppner Elementary. Totality set coyotes yowling in many areas according to some area farmers, but for the most part domestic animals were totally unimpressed as cows went right on eating.
