

Spring fashions attract many to sewing workshop

Thoughts of sewing something special drew crowds of women in Pendleton and Heppner the past week, where Extension sponsored a varied day in each community. Tuned to the modern woman with creative interests in sewing, as well as fashions and all that is new, the event attracted more than 150 women from the two county area.

"What's New in Fashion, Fabric and Color for spring" opened the session, followed by "Painless Sewing"—quick tricks for sewing better and faster. Special sessions, which were repeated throughout the day, were Pants Update, Applique, T-Shirts for the Family, Down and Outdoor Wear, 4-H BEEF WEIGH-IN AND FIELD DAY. All 4-H members are reminded of the Fitting and animals must be weighed to be eligible to compete in the events at the county fair.

TOUR TO HOOD RIVER
The planned tour for homemakers to Hood River and nearby points has caught the interest of local women with a full bus load scheduled to make the trip. Included in the events of the day will be a tour of Jantzen clothing factory, the Hood River Distillery, lunch at Partridge Inn and a tour of the Winery and Mall at Bingen. All signs point to a fun and educational spring special event!

CLOTHING FOR CONSERVATIONISTS

Consumers can save money and energy by selecting garments made from blends of natural and man-made fibers, says Ardis Koester, OSU Extension textile and clothing specialist.

These garments require less time to tumble dry than comparable garments made of natural fibers. Over the lifetime of a piece of clothing, the minutes saved on drying will add up to a large energy savings.

Moreover, garments of blended fibers are more durable so they can be worn for a longer period of time. They also make excellent hand-me-downs, notes Mrs. Koester. Clothing made of this fabric blend can be recycled and made into another garment when minor worn areas develop or the owner is tired of the style.

COST OF ENERGY IS CHANGING TEXTILE PRODUCTS

The rising cost of energy is forcing the textile industry to find new textile production methods, reports Ardis Koester, er, Oregon State University extension textile and clothing specialist.

Fiber products are modifying existing man-made fibers to be lighter in weight so they require less raw material and energy in the manufacturing process. For the consumer, these changed fabrics will have the advantage of coolness in the summer. In addition, several garments made of these lighter weight fibers will be more adaptable for layering to keep warm in the winter.

Extension sees need for food preservation

4-H club

Spring is in the air, thoughts are turning to gardening and the fresh produce that will come from the backyard plot. "But, what about the produce that you can't use fresh? You can preserve it for later as part of a 4-H food preservation project," said John Nordheim, Morrow County Extension agent.

Canning, freezing, pickling and drying are all part of the 4-H food preservation project which will help boys and girls in grades four through 12 learn skills they can use all their lives, Nordheim explained.

Not only will young people learn how to preserve foods, but they learn to preserve food safely by knowing which products need to be canned under pressure and which can be canned by other methods.

With the increased interest in outdoor activities such as hiking and backpacking, 4-H'ers can prepare their own dried foods such as fruit or fruit leathers which are nutritious and lightweight.

The food preservation project is a logical extension of the 4-H vegetable gardening project, Nordheim added. By combining the two, 4-H'ers can learn how to grow and then preserve food for themselves and their families.

Now is a good time to start a 4-H food preservation club, Nordheim pointed out. By starting now, the 4-H members can learn about equipment, how to select good produce, and other items basic to a successful food preservation effort.

"Of course, we need adult volunteer 4-H leaders to teach the young people. The 4-H leader will find great satisfaction in teaching young people what the leader already knows," Nordheim stated.

Persons who are interested in knowing more about the 4-H food preservation project, or how to start a 4-H club, may contact the Morrow County Extension Office in Heppner for more information.

April 20 set for Beef Improvement Day

A Beef Improvement Day has been scheduled for April 20 at Hermiston, according to John P. Nordheim, Morrow County Extension Agent. An adult and a youth program are offered. The "adult" program, at the Umatilla County Fairgrounds in Hermiston at 9:30 a.m., offers programs on performance records, progeny testing, nutrition and programmable calculators and their use by cattlemen.

The "youth" program starts at 9 a.m. at the Umatilla Experiment Station. It offers a beef judging demonstration, judging contest, beef cattle outlook, and others. Everyone is welcome to attend the session of their choice. Nordheim says. He adds that both sessions will have excellent programs, and speakers from Oregon, Washington, Kansas and Missouri. More information can be obtained from your local Extension office.

OSU to host annual Sheep and Wool Day

The annual Sheep and Wool Day will be held April 28 at the Oregon State University Campus in Corvallis, according to John P. Nordheim, Morrow County Extension Agent.

Registration starts at 8:30 a.m. at Withycombe Hall.
