Heppner Adventists to observe traditional Easter rite

As Christians worldwide prepare to observe Holy Week, Heppner Seventh-Day Adventists will take part in one of the rites established by Christ just before His death, reports Bill Poole, pastor.

"Before Jesus and His disciples ate the Last Supper the day before His crucifixion," Poole says, "Jesus washed their feet, in the manner of a servant of that era. He told them that as He had done to them, so they should do to one another."

"This beautifully symbolic act, which we call the ordinance of humility, prepares us to humble ourselves before we take the bread and the cup of the Lord's communion. All members of the church, insofar as they are physically able, observe the rite, the men retiring to another room, while the women remain in the sanctuary for this part of the service."

Adventists practice foot-washing and take communion quarterly, according to Poole. He says there is no theological significance to the timing of the service.

The service for this quarter will be held Friday evening, April 13, at 7:30. Because Adventists hold open communion, all Christians who desire to do so are welcome to participate.
