and had worked well in California. Some of these organizations had two piece cards. One side had a note which stated, "Your vehicle had been checked by the sheriff's livestock patrol . . .", the other half has spaces for the vehicle and its description, location, etc., and is turned into the sheriff.

There is a crime triangle, Clark said, made up of the victim, the thief or vandal, and the opportunity. It takes all three elements to have a crime. Just break one of the sides of the triangle and you stop the crime.

Clark felt the opportunity was the side to break. Make your valuables more visible to you; use yard lights and-or watch your possessions. Identify your valuables . . . use your Oregon driver's license number on tools, saddles, farm equipment, etc., brand your cattle, put your mark on your things, make them less accessible, enclose things you don't want stolen or vandalized, disable equipment which could be driven away, take out the rotor, or battery. Fence in your cows and fence out predators (two and four legged). Make the thieves work for anything they get; if they wanted to work they would have a job; if they have to work for the spoils, they are more likely to leave some evidence that they were there.

Criminal trespass in dwellings is classified in the first degree, a Class A misdemeanor, or trespassing on property.

Clark added that it is hard to catch and convict someone of trespassing. Unless the gate is locked or the land is well posted, there isn't any grounds for pressing charges. If you tell a person to leave your land and he doesn't, he can be arrested.

There will be more trespassing with the increase in the number of people. Education of the hunters will help. Start education with the purchase of a hunting license. Tell them about closing gates, where there are open spaces available for hunting, firewood restrictions, etc.

DelFatti was asked about stopping stock truck and other livestock conveyances and replied that "Salem" has instructed officers to stop and inspect as many livestock hauls as possible. They don't have the authority to arbitrarily stop vehicles that are apparently obeying traffic laws.

Spelling champs win local honors

Top spellers from Morrow County schools competed Monday evening at Heppner Elementary School. Winners in the three divisions of the contest were: Division 1. Elementary to grade six, first place, Renee Struthers, Heppner, second place, Chris McLaughlin, Heppner, third, Eric Pointer, Ione, and Mike Rietmann, Ione tied with Pointer; Division Two, grades 7-9, first, Denny Starr, Ione, second, Betty Slocumb, Riverside Elementary, Boardman, third, Chris Rietmann, Ione;

Division Three, grades 10-12, first place, Tammy Collingwood, Riverside, second, Tim Hellberg, Riverside, and third place, Teena Lindstrom, Ione.

The first place finisher in each division advances to statewide spelling contest which will be held in Salem next September at the Oregon State fair. Denny Starr and Tammy Collingwood are repeat winners from previous years. Starr won Division I in 1977 and Collingwood won Division 2 in 1977 and 1978.

Commissioner candidates

Science in analytical chemistry and at one time before her marriage, a member of the OSU faculty in animal research; her state presidency of the Sheep Growers Association, director of Blue Mountain Community College and service as moderator of the Ione Methodist Church. She told the committee she had resigned the BMCC board for health reasons but her health had improved to the point that she would be able to handle the responsibilities of Commissioner.

Several issues were brought up during the evening from questions directed to the candidates by the committee.

On the condition of county roads, all the candidates were in agreement that they need repairs. But they differed on how to accomplish it. Cantin said school bus roads must be maintained but residents shouldn't expect immediate road repairs after thunderstorms. Crum said he would certainly support a proposed $4 million bond issue on roads. To solve the road problem, Krebs said X number of dollars would be required for X number of miles and at $88 a ton for asphalt, the county might consider road beds with gravel. "The roads are in bad shape, Lindstrom said, but perhaps we're all spoiled.

Part of my solution would be put it to the voters; Do they want to spend more money? Don Peterson said he would prefer gravel in his area.

Regarding the north-south division, Randall Peterson said candidate Dick Wilkinson is strictly for Morrow County and has a good outlook; Don Peterson said Morrow was a small, but diverse county. "We should help the northern half rather than secede. Lindstrom asked when all the animosity began and Commissioner Warren McCoy, Irrigon, replied when people in the north saw officials only at tax time. Responded Krebs: "I would consider myself a regionalist. When I served on the BMCC board, I was acquainted with all the people of eastern Oregon. To bring the ends together, I would hold meetings in both ends and consider the problems of both." Crum emphasized good communication and transportation while Cantin said, "if it takes an apple box to bring North and South together, he would do it."

On retention of Pioneer Memorial Hospital, 100 percent of the candidates were in favor of maintaining the hospital's role in Morrow County because of the rural location of heppner.
