Some bills did not survive

By Sean Griffin

The 60th Legislative Assembly adjourned last week, leaving in its wake a record distinguished almost as much by what it didn't accomplish as what it did.

Among measures that did not survive the process are:

—A measure to refer the fate of nuclear energy in Oregon to the voters.

—A measure to tie future nuclear power plant construction to a permanent solution to the problem of radioactive waste storage.

—A bill proposing to ban disposable diapers.

—A referral allowing voters to decide whether the use of safety belts in passenger cars should be mandatory.

—A measure asking voters once again to decide whether the state should allow the death penalty for certain crimes.

—A bill allowing the option of self-service pumps at gasoline stations.

—A proposal to increase the maximum speed limit to 65 mph.

—A proposal to increase the maximum speed limit to 70 mph.

—A bill increasing the cigarette tax from nine cents to 12 cents a pack.

—A measure enabling voters to create a five-member, independent reapportionment commission charged with redrawing district lines for legislative and Congressional seats following the 1980 census.

—A measure prohibiting minors to have abortions unless the doctor could produce a notarized statement that the parents were aware of the proposed abortion.

—A $2 million weatherization program for the elderly.

—An Energy Stamp program that would assist low income elderly in paying their utility bills.

—A measure implementing Article XI-D of the Oregon Constitution, adopted by the voters in 1932, putting the state in the business of water-based electrical power generation.

—A measure approving privately-financed trailers for use as a visitation site for prisoners and their families at the state penitentiary.

—Regulation of shipments of radioactive materials through the state.

—A bill prohibiting the sale of Oregon farmland to non-resident aliens and foreign-owned corporations.

—Any of a number of bills proposing comprehensive reform of Oregon's system of Workers' Compensation—the costliest in the nation.

—A memorial asking Congress to require that only self-extinguishing cigarettes be sold in the United States.

—A bill prohibiting smoking in most public places.

—A measure to regulate the practice of hypnosis in Oregon.

—A bill requiring auto insurance companies to base premiums solely on the basis of an individual's driving record.
