Landstoner said the 25 acres of land is more than what is actually needed in much of the area. He said no improvements would be taken and the railroad will bear all of the expenses. He offered $600 to $700 per acre.

The commissioners chuckled at his offer and Port Manager Buddy Toadvin said the price is "unacceptable."

The parties decided to take a look at it more in the near future. They decided to have the land appraised with the parties sharing the cost. They agreed for the railroad to take as little land as possible and not to disturb the industrial area.

The port commissioners also decided to build an effluent watering system on Port land and then rent out the land.

Foreign trade zone eyed by port

To summarize, a foreign trade zone gives the user a competitive edge by saving on taxes, and cutting costs by reducing transportation expenses, warehouse charges and insurance premiums. It also cuts by a lot of red tape in customs and increases cash flow in the economy.

Congress passed the Foreign Trade Zone Act primarily to bolster American trade by removing some of the inadequacies of the bonded warehouse system.

In other Port of Morrow news, Charles Landstoner of the Union Pacific Railroad asked the commissioners to sell land 50-feet north and up to 100-feet south of the existing railroad in the Hinkle-Boardman area.

Landstoner said the 25 acres of land is more than what is actually needed in much of the area. He said no improvements would be taken and the railroad will bear all of the expenses. He offered $600 to $700 per acre.

The commissioners chuckled at his offer and Port Manager Buddy Toadvin said the price is "unacceptable."

The commissioners decided on a $425,000 system. The money will be borrowed from the Oregon Ports Revolving Fund.

To save money, the commissioners decided to use plastic pipe (which Toadvin said will last longer with an effluent water system than steel pipe) and the Port will hire the laborers to lay the pipe rather than contracting the work to be done. The port will save $40,000 by doing its own labor.

Effluent water systems are a higher quality of water to irrigate with. The commissioners decided to accept bids on the pipe and materials to be used.

In related action, the commissioners accepted a bid from J and B Farms to farm the effluent land. The Miracle Potato Co., which is now on the land, will have a chance if J and B Farms cannot work out the details of the agreement. Lucky O Ranch and DBS Farms also bid to lease the land.

The bids were for 750 or more acres of Port land. The commissioners may require a performance bond.
