

Grant aids college broadcasts

Dr. Donald S. Bryant, executive director of the Oregon Educational Public Broadcasting System (OEPBS), has announced that a government grant has been awarded that will permit OEPBS-FM programming to be available to the Pendleton area through Blue Mountain Community College's radio station KRBM-FM.

For the first time, such nationally famous programs as "All Things Considered" and other national public radio programs would be available to listeners in this area.

"This expanded programming comes at a time when the college's radio station is in the process of making application for an increase in power."

according to Ron Daniels, college president.

Under the guidance of Blaine Hanks, BMCC radio broadcasting program director, the college is currently studying the costs of increasing KRBM's power from the current 10 watt to 100 watts. The change has been necessitated by new Federal Communications Commission (FCC) requirements for educational stations.

"At the latest, the new programming service from OEPBS would start next fall," Hanks said. The service will be through microwave link from Black Mountain near Heppner where OEPBS already has established transmission facilities.

'Career Planning' workshop for women, minorities

"Career Planning and Career Options" is the title of a free one-day workshop to be held Saturday, Oct. 27, from 8:30 a.m. until 3 p.m. on the Blue Mountain Community College campus in Pendleton. The workshop is aimed at women and minorities who are seeking new careers, thinking about a job change or re-entering the working world. "Students who have not yet decided what they will do upon graduation might also be interested in the workshop," according to Katie Larson, non-traditional careers coordinator at Blue Mountain.

Topics to be covered include: Career and life span planning, job search tactics, employment rights, and non-traditional careers. Marilyn Cates, Treasure Valley Community College director of the TVCC-BMCC non-traditional careers projects, will lead the discussion of career planning including defining goals and setting values.

Shirley Dudzik, TVCC Community education coordinator, will cover resume writing, interviewing, and other job search practices. A local attorney is scheduled to give advice on job discrimination laws and how to rectify employee discrimination problems.

A panel of women currently working in non-traditional careers will be on hand to discuss their experiences in a non-traditional career. A non-traditional job is defined by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare as an occupation in which women constitute less than 38 percent of the people employed in that particular occupation, Larson noted.

Also scheduled to speak is Audry Parsons, representative from the Portland office of the Bureau of Labor. Mrs. Parsons will discuss apprenticeship programs.

The non-traditional careers program is new this year at Blue Mountain. It is a project, funded through the Oregon Department of Education, to promote employment opportunities for area women and minorities.

Teachers sought for next term

Fall Evening Division classes for Blue Mountain Community College are into the fourth week in cities in south Morrow County but Nancy Brownfield, BMCC coordinator for south Morrow County, is already looking for teachers and subjects for the winter term.

Although the winter term for the evening division does not start until Jan. 7, Brownfield must have a schedule of classes and teachers sent into the college by Nov. 16.

Brownfield can offer evening classes in Heppner, Lexington and Ione but she likes Lexington so students can come from both ways. Each class needs 10 people, an instructor and a place to meet. Brownfield said she usually can find the place and a teacher but the students have to let her know what types of classes they want to take.

"If someone wants a special class, I need to know as soon as possible so I can get things ready," Brownfield said.

She also is interested in finding teachers for the winter term.

"Anyone who would like to teach can," she said. "No teaching certificate is required. Only a desire and expertise in an area is required. Any subject matter can be taught from arts and crafts to electronics."

Brownfield said beginning teachers are usually paid about $8 an hour for work directly with the students. Three types of classes can be offered. Skill upgrade classes (like cake decorating), community interest classes (like dancing), and BMCC transfer classes (like History).

"Teachers can apply by contacting me and I will interview them and send the application to the college," Brownfield said. "The college may want to screen some teachers depending on the course subject."

Brownfield can be contacted by calling 676-5039.

Seminars aimed at high school science students

Computers to volcanoes will be covered in special science seminars offered by Blue Mountain Community College especially for high school students in the Pendleton, Hermiston and Heppner areas.

The one-credit courses will be offered Monday nights from 7 to 9 p.m. on the Pendleton BMCC campus as well as at Hermiston High School and Heppner High School for the first time this year, according to Larry Eddy, science department head.

"We will be offering shorter sessions, but they will be taught all three quarters in all three areas," Eddy commented. Cost will be $11 per course.
