Juvenile detention center discussed

Morrow County's new Director of Public Works, Donald I. Briggs, should be arriving in Heppner the second week in February. Judge Don McElligott said Monday.

In County Court news for Jan. 23 in the Irrigon Court, 16 persons attended to voice their opposition to the combining of the two justice courts saying they thought they would lose services if the change occurs.

Jim Thompson, Boardman city manager, asked the court to have the county endorse the Port of Morrow overpass being asked for by the city of Boardman.

Carolyn Holt, Morrow County juvenile officer, and Bruce Kinch, of the same position in Umatilla County, met to discuss the use of the juvenile detention center in Pendleton.

Umatilla made an offer on the use of the center that was turned down by the county court. The Morrow County court made an offer of $40 per diem for a boarding fee for the use of the center and a $2,000 yearly retaining fee.

Umatilla is asking Morrow

County to share in the expenses for the use of the detention center.

"If they (Umatilla) say no (to the offer) we will have to go elsewhere to board our kids," Judge Don McElligott said.

Smoke detectors aid in fire fatalities drop

Fatalities from Oregon fires continued to decline in 1979, and smoke detectors deserve some of the credit, Clyde W. Centers, state fire marshal, said.

There were 69 fire fatalities in the state in 1979, compared with 74 in 1978, and 94 in 1977. Of the 1979 fatalities, 41 were caused by asphyxiation and 28 by burns.

There were 52 fatalities in residences, 12 in vehicles, and two in nursing homes.

While the number of deaths dropped, fire losses were the highest in history.

Centers said that losses in the first nine months of last year totaled $57 million, which was $5 million more than during all 12 months of 1978.

The Fire Marshal Division is part of the Oregon Department of Commerce.
