Bladder cancer victims seen as increasing

The number of people susceptible to bladder cancer is expected to rise in coming years, according to Dr. Harper Pearse, associate professor of urology at the University of Oregon Health Sciences Center School of Medicine and principal investigator for the National Bladder Cancer Project at the UOHS.

His prediction is based on the fact that bladder cancer is most often diagnosed in patients 50 to 70 years of age, the segment of the U.S. population that is increasing at the fastest rate. According to the National Cancer Institute, the disease is related to chemical and environmental exposure and there is increased incidence of bladder cancer in urban areas and in cigarette smokers.

Sen. Wingard to run for State Treasurer's Post

State Senator George Wingard (R-Eugene) announced his candidacy for the Republican nomination for the office of State Treasurer Monday in Eugene.

Wingard, 44, is a graduate of Oregon State University's School of Engineering in 1958. He has a building business in Eugene.

His involvement in community service began in 1966 when he was elected to the Eugene City Council. In 1968 he was honored as Eugene's first citizen and was named on one of the five outstanding young men in Oregon.

Wingard was elected to the State House of Representatives in 1968 and was the chairman of the House Task Force on Pollution in 1969.

In 1970, he was elected to the state senate and in 1971 he was the chairman of the Senate Task Force on Economic Development.

He was the assistant minority leader in 1977 and the chairman of the Energy Policy Review Committee, which is the oversight committee for the Dept. of Energy, in 1980.

Wingard has served on a wide variety of committees in his years in office including child care, air and water pollution, housing, budget, revenue, aging, environment and land use, energy conservation, evaluating local government, alcohol and drug abuse, utility rate relief, school finance, transportation, urban affairs, labor and business.

He lives in Eugene with his wife, Rhea, and three children.

Students, parents invited to comment on nutritional value of lunches

Students and parents with an opinion about the size and nutritional content of school lunch servings now have a chance to say so.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture is asking the public to help develop a standardized monitoring system to ensure that each child receives a daily lunch that meets the department's nutritional requirements.

Specifically, the public is invited to respond to a series of questions which was printed in the Federal Register Jan. 18.

For example, what should be monitored—food portions on plates or total amounts of food a school kitchen serves during a particular period? Should food service workers determine portions visually or by some other method? Should frozen pre-packaged meals be measured the same way as fresh food?

Only lunches that provide specified amounts of four food groups are eligible for reimbursement under the National School Lunch Program. The amounts are designed to supply about one-third of daily food needs for a 10 to 12 year-old child.

The public is invited to send specific ideas and comments to help the committee develop a system that will satisfy both common sense and the need for strict accountability of federal funds.

Send comments by March 3, to Stanley Garnett, School Programs Division, 201 14th St., S.E., Room 4122, Washington, D.C. 20250.
