

Grasshopper invasion expected

County Extension Agent Harold Kerr expects grasshoppers to be everywhere in about a month especially causing problems near homes, gardens, and irrigated croplands.

Kerr said after harvest is completed, the then adult grasshoppers will be flying to areas near homes or to irrigated cropland.

"There are a lot of grasshoppers in concentrated areas," Kerr said. "Spring wheat and irrigated crops may have to be sprayed."

Recently about 4,000 acres of cropland were sprayed in the south lone area. Between 15 and 20 wheat growers got together to finance the spraying of the land. Because of the cost, only the edges of the fields were sprayed.

"The farmers had to pay the entire cost of the spray program," Kerr said. "Because it was cropland, they did not get any help. This is the first year we have had to spray cropland. In the past, the big spray programs have been done on rangeland and the cost was split between the farmer, the state and the federal government with each paying one-third."

Kerr recommends that gardeners use the chemical "malathion" to protect their gardens from the grasshoppers but warns that it only lasts for two to three days so the grasshoppers may come back.

He said malathion is the safest product to use but it does not last the longest.

About 350,000 acres of rangeland were sprayed for grasshoppers last year in areas where it was just "full of them" but those areas are practically trouble free this year, Kerr said.

Kerr said the rainy weather in recent weeks has been good for the wheat in Morrow County, which is 80 percent soft white wheat that is used for cakes, cookies and noodles and is the major crop in the county. The rain makes the wheat have fuller kernels and have less protein, which is desirable in the soft white wheat. Soft white wheat that has low protein of eight or nine percent is better quality than 10 or 12 percent. The higher protein content is desirable in the red wheats that are used for bread, he said.

The extension agent added that the cool, wet weather has created a "rust colored fungus on the wheat which will reduce the yield somewhat but the fuller kernels should more than make up for that loss."

Because of the cooler weather, harvesting should begin between July 10 and 15 depending on the wheat farm's elevation which varies in Morrow County from 800 feet above sea level to 3,500 feet, Kerr said.

Kerr said the farmers would like to see a higher price for their grain as harvest season nears. Last week it was $4 a bushel in Portland.

The rain has caused some problems for hay growers, Kerr said. Hay that has been cut is still down because it has not warmed up enough to dry the hay so it can be baled. Rain has delayed the second cutting of land that has been cut earlier in the year. All the farmers can do is keep rolling the hay until it dries so it can be baled. Once it is baled, "the rain won't particularly hurt it," Kerr said.

Oregon and U.S. farmers 'suffer'

"The Oregon farmer and U.S. farmer are the only farmers in the world suffering from the embargo," said Don Thompson, Moro farmer and president of the Oregon Wheat Growers League.

Thompson referred to the Carter Administration's embargo of grain to the Soviet Union, and the recent decision to allow U.S. firms to sell foreign grain to the Soviets.

Bike riders are running out of time

Bicycle riders who are interested in participating in the "Wheels For Life" bike-a-thon are running out of time because the race is this July 19.

The race starts at the Ruggs store at 9:30 a.m. and ends at the Ione City Park. Registration begins at Ruggs at 8:30 a.m.

Persons that need rides to the starting point may go to the Ione City Park, Del's Market in Lexington or the Heppner City Park by 8:30 Saturday morning to be picked up.

Coordinator Lorraine Ball said parents should make sure their children have a ride home after the race.

Pledge cards for the fund-raising event for the St. Jude's Children's Hospital may be picked up at the Bank of Eastern Oregon in Ione, Del's Market in Lexington or Murray's Drug store in Heppner.

Participants that collect $25 or more receive a bike-athon tee shirt and bike riders that collect $75 or more in pledges receive a backpack. Grand prizes will be given to the boy and girl that collect the most money for the hospital.

Lunch will be served after the race at the Ione City Park. The Morrow County Search and Rescue team will assist the bike riders along the route.

Money raised from the bike-athon will go to the St. Jude's Children's Research Hospital which is a cancer research institution where child patients are attended to free of charge.

"This means that the Soviets can now buy grain produced from anywhere in the world except from the United States and that just doesn't make sense," he said. The Oregon Wheat Growers League Board of Directors met on June 25 and adopted a resolution that called for "immediate termination of the American grain embargo against Russia."
