Extension emphasizes conservation

by Birdine Tullis. Extension Service

The emphasis will be on "Helping You Conserve Resources" in the 1980-81 OSU Extension Service family living-home economics program in Morrow and Umatilla counties, following a statewide trend

The theme was selected following results of the statewide long range program development effort conducted throughout Oregon last year by the Extension Service. Large numbers of local citizens were involved in the effort, pointing out their concerns for Morrow County. Their needs and concerns in most cases were identical to those of all Oregonians. When results from all over the state were tabulated, it was clear that resource conservation and management were the over-riding concerns of Oregonians which extension needs to address

The importance of careful energy use in the face of increasing costs and shortages and the need to learn more about managing the family's economic resources in the time of inflation were the needs most often ident-

In Morrow County the development committee was concerned with teaching people how to manage their time effectively, how to eat nutritionally-balanced diets. and how to help children and adults achieve their full potential. These concerns also followed state-wide trends.

While "Conserving Resources" will be the dominant theme of programs offered during the coming year, not all programs will be directly related as extension will continue to offer a balanced program designed to meet a variety of educational needs. The family living program will offer a variety of ways for people to get the information better lives

Four Study Groups meet monthly and always welcome new members. These are informal learning groups which meet monthly to explore a chosen topic. Leaders who have received training on the topic share the information with other members. Special interest topics are presented as public meetings throughout the year. A recent example was the "Pasta" last week, and the "Potpourri," last month. Other public interest topics or workshops will be offered in the spring. including a workshop on "Sewing to Fit," and one on county government. They are open to all interested people and usually without cost. A correspondence course is offered yearly which allows homemakers to study at home and-complete as their schedules allow.

In addition, the county extension office has a wide variety of bulletins and fact sheets available free on such topics as food preservation, home insulation, clothing construction, child development, burning wood, and horticulture. Extension reaches many audiences through radio and newspapers, as well as the monthly Extension letter which is mailed to all 4-H leaders, study group members, and anyone wishing to receive it. Television, too, is utilized in areas where local programming or stations are available to agents. Not to be overlooked are the extension agents in each county, who are available to all for personalized help with problems.

Anyone interested may receive a printed program listing all family topics for the year by calling 676-9642. In addition, you will usually find a notice or article relating to coming events in this news-

building, directly over the Coast to Coast store in Heppner. In addition, messages may be left for agents at the county office building in Irrigon, where they will be delivered on to agents on Thursdays. One member of the Morrow staff is usually in north Morrow County on that
