Two apply for State Farmer's degree in FFA

Two Heppner High School Vo-Ag students, Anne Van Schojack and Jeff Bailey, are applying for a State Farmer's degree in the Future Farmers of America (FFA).

Part of the application is based on their Vo-Ag record books in district competition. Anne's was the best in the district.

Basic requirements for a State Farmer's degree are: membership in Vo-Ag for at least two years; at least 500 hours on their project or $500 spent on their project.

This award is presented to only 3 percent of F.F.A. members in the state.

Lutheran high school students study world religions

The Hope and Valby Lutheran congregations are sponsoring a Thursday night study of world religions starting this Thursday night. The group will meet at 7:30 p.m. downstairs at the Hope Lutheran Church.

The course is especially designed for high school people, and all are welcome - Lutheran or not.

The aim of the study is to gain an intelligent understanding of the people in other religions and to develop a greater awareness of the Christian church's relationship in the world.

The course will deal with Judaism, Islam, Hinduism, Buddhism, Taoism, Confucianism and Shintoism.

Angling regs available

Printed copies of the 1981 Angling Regulations booklet have been distributed to license agents throughout the state and are now available wherever hunting and fishing licenses are sold.

Regulations appear in the same 56-page booklet format as last year with an illustration of the chinook salmon, Oregon's state fish on the cover. Angling regulations and seasons for all species are included as well as rules governing the taking of bullfrogs, shellfish and intertidal animals.

Rules for ocean salmon fishing are not found in the booklet this year. They will not be set for state regulated waters until April, after regulations have been set for the ocean zone beyond three miles. Regulations from three to 200 miles offshore are adopted by the U.D. Secretary of Commerce after recommendation by the Pacific Fishery Management Council. States set rules for the waters off their coastlines within three miles.

Anglers are urged by the Fish and Wildlife Department to pick up a copy of the free booklet for a quick review before fishing in 1981. While most regulations remain the same, there have been a number of changes affecting local waters.

Many anglers keep a copy of the regulations book in tackle box or fishing vest. A small zip-lock type plastic bag will help insure the booklet remains usable in spite of the soakings sometimes inherent in fishing.
