The long straight sleeves of chantilly lace were caught at the wrist with a row of buttons. The skirt, featuring deep scallops of crystal pleating accented by chantilly lace, flowed gently into a chapel-length train. ## Grieb recognized by Angus Association

Ken Grieb, Lexington, has been recognized nationally by the American Angus Association for having three cows listed in the association's 1981 Pathfinder Recognition Report.

The Pathfinder program identifies superior Angus females in the breed based on important production traits including regularity of calving and weaning weight production, according to Dick Spader, executive vice president. Superior Angus cows based on performance records are listed in a Pathfinder Report published annually by the American Angus Association, with headquarters in St. Joseph, Missouri.

To qualify the breeder must have been actively involved in Angus herd improvement records. The top cows in his herd are identified from these records. In summary, the qualifying cows must produce a calf at a young age and continue to wean a heavy calf on an average of 12 months. Each calf must have a weaning ratio of 105 or higher with at least 10 herdmates evaluated each year. A minimum production of three calves is required for a cow to be listed in the report.

In the 1981 Pathfinder Report a total of 2,526 cows are listed. That represents less than one percent of 300,000 head reviewed for publication. In addition a total of 78 bulls that have sired five or more

Pathfinder cows in the report are listed in a sire summary. The Pathfinder Report is published in the May issue of the Angus Journal.
