Just seven miles south of Walla Walla, Washington travelers on U.S. Highway 12 will see a large brown sign which reads "Whitman Mission. Natural Historic Site." Turning past the sign and perhaps a half mile east, one will find a small unobtrusive building surrounded by neatly trimmed lawn and a carefully tended parklike setting. One will even find the millpond filled with hungry ducks and plenty of tables for a picnic. It was here in this parklike setting that a place called "the mission at Wailatpu," (as the mission was once called) was established in 1836 by a young doctor and his bride, Marcus and Narcissa Whitman. Wailatpu meant "place of the people of the rye grass" and originally was in the territory of the Cayuse Indians. As emigrants began moving across the plains into the Pacific Northwest during the 1840's, the mission at Wailatpu also became an important station on the Oregon Trail. An early exploration trip by Dr. Whitman and the Rev. Samuel Parker in 1835 helped to select mission sites in the Oregon country. In February of 1836 Marcus and Narcissa Whitman were married and soon afterward they and Henry and Eliza Spalding, with William Gray, headed westward in covered wagons. What made this journal a notable one was that Narcissa Whitman and Eliza Spalding were the first white women to cross the continent overland. Their successful trek soon

A new program called REDDI, (Report Every Drunk Driver Immediately) developed by the Oregon State Police and the Oregon Traffic Safety Commission has been formed so that citizens may call a toll free number and report drunk drivers, it was recently announced in a news release from Governor Vic Atiyeh. The toll free number is 1-800-452-7888. Callers should have a description of the drivers vehicle, the license number of the vehicle, the location of the vehicle and the direction in which it is traveling. The caller does not have to identify himself, the news release stated.

Chlorine bleach, great cleaner that it is, should be avoided for aluminum (it will darken the surface) and for linoleum (it will make it brittle).

inspired others to follow. The two women quickly became good friends, although they were reportedly opposites in personality. Narcissa was said to be a pretty blonde who was playful and bubbly, which might explain why Henry Spalding had once fallen in love with her and proposed marriage. Eliza was known as a small quiet brunette, extremely devout in her religion. The party of five reached the Columbia River on Sept. 1, 1836 where they were to select their mission stations at Fort Vancouver. The Whitmans settled among the Cayuse at Wailatpu and the Spaldings opened their mission among the Nez Perce at Lapwai, 110 miles east. The two couples learned the Indian languages and devised an alphabet. Spalding printed books in Nez Perce and Spokane on a press brought to Lapwai in 1839. The visitor center located near the mission site of Wailatpu contains examples of Spalding's printwork and a book of Matthew written in Nez Perce. Marcus Whitman also attempted to teach the Cayuse how to farm, but with little success. The Cayuse were a nomadic Indian. As the Wailatpu mission slowly expanded along the Walla Walla River, Marcus constructed a larger mission house, a gristmill, sawmill, and a blacksmith shop. He built homes for his family as they became more established. One of the houses later served as an "emigrant house" for weary travelers passing through. Soon the mission became a regular stopping point for wagons traveling on the Oregon Trail. It was one of these wagons which brought seven Sager children in 1844 who were orphaned during their trek eastward. Marcus and Narcissa Whitman took the children into their family gladly, for they were still feeling the loss of their only child, a daughter who had drowned a few years before. -to be continued-

Currency reproductions donated to museum

BY JUSTINE WEATHERFORD
Fourteen antiquated reproductions of historical colonial and revolutionary currency were added to the large collection of coins and currency in the Morrow County Museum recently. Persons interested in money (who isn't!) can learn much from the many coins and bills contributed through the years to the museum's display. The most recent contribution, fourteen small paper bills, all look and feel old but are careful reproductions which I bought at Williamsburg, Virginia, and contributed to the county museum with the thought that school children and other students of history could learn from them. The shortage of coins in Colonial America seriously hindered the conduct of business. Few British coins reached the colonies, but colonial shipmasters brought in various foreign monies. The most common money in circulation in early America was the Spanish milled dollar. Its value varied from colony to colony. To overcome this serious handicap to business, paper money was issued by the individual colonies. Odd denominations were frequently printed because of the lack of small change. Many bills were not printed on the reverse side. In order to discourage counterfeiting, each bill was usually numbered and was signed individually by hand. Much of the cost of the Revolutionary War was met by the issuance of paper currency. Over two hundred and fifty million dollars in paper currency was issued by the Continental Congress, and about two hundred million dollars was issued by state governments. The rapid depreciation of this paper money led to the well-known phrase "not worth a continental."
