Area seniors celebrate Christmas

Babe Harris accepts a check for $200 presented by Zoe Watts on behalf of All Saints Episcopal Church as Bob Blue, (left) the Rev. Edwin Watts and Clayton Ayers look on.
The gift will go toward the purchase of a food processor and other kitchen items needed by the senior citizens group.

About 95 holiday-spirited senior citizens gathered at the fairgrounds Wednesday, Dec. 23, for a Christmas dinner of turkey and ham with all the trimmings.

A festive spirit filled the air as the group, under the leadership of Darlene Arrington, sang several Christmas carols. Ola Mae Groshens provided accompaniment on the piano.

The tables were decorated with Christmas centerpieces, and a tree, decorated by the seniors, adorned a corner of the room.

A special presentation was made by the Rev. Edwin Watts and his wife Zoe, of All Saints Episcopal Church in Heppner.

The Rev. donated $200 to the senior group, to be used toward the purchase of a food processor and other needed kitchen items.

When the singing and ceremonies were completed, that special guest arrived straight from the North Pole.

Santa visited with the seniors and handed out candy canes to everyone present.

Area students perform at Christmas music programs

lone students entertain their audience with a special song.

lone students in grades one through 12 performed at a Christmas Music Program last Tuesday, Dec. 22. The program featured Christmas music performed in the school cafeteria by the school band and choir.

Heppner kindergarten through fourth grade students performed for teachers, family and friends at a Christmas Music Program on Tuesday afternoon, Dec. 22.

Music selections included children's contemporary Christmas songs as well as traditional Christmas carols, which the audience was asked to join in and sing along.

The children performed under the direction of individual teachers and Music Instructor Kitty Coon in the multi-purpose room which had been decorated by the junior high and sixth grade students.

Many Oregonians can renew driver licenses by mail

Slightly more than half the nearly 19,000 Oregonians who are scheduled to renew their driver licenses during the first two weeks of January will be eligible, as safe drivers, to renew by mail rather than in person at a Motor Vehicles Division field office.

The safe driver extension program, approved by the 1981 Legislature, allows drivers with no convictions, accidents, or other entries on their records, such as license suspensions, to renew by mail once in any eight year period. The record, according to DMV Administrator David P. Moomaw must be absolutely clean for the last four years—the standard driver license period in Oregon.

Renewal reminder notices were to go in the mail Dec. 9 and tell nearly 9,900 drivers on the mailing envelopes and on the renewal notice itself that they "deserve a reward" as safe drivers.

The fee for renewal, however, will be the same as for 9,100 drivers who will have to renew in person at a DMV field office.

Although slightly more than half the state's drivers appear to be eligible for the extension, Moomaw says the division expects some people will still choose to go to an office and get a new license with a new photo on it. The agency will be checking carefully to see just how many take advantage of the program as well as any problems that might develop in the extension program.

The division trimmed eight positions from its budget when the Legislature approved the extension program, so Moomaw says he obviously hopes most eligible drivers will elect to get the extension by mail.

Drivers who do so will be given an adhesive sticker to put on the back of the current photo license. The sticker will show the driver's name, address, drivers license number and the new expiration date.
