

Juvenile Services Comm. directors report on programs

Morrow County Juvenile Services Commission Program Directors Debbie Sheirbon and Barbara Weatherell have reported that various programs throughout the county have been very successful, said a spokesperson for the commission.

Barbara Weatherell, program director for north Morrow, reports fifty-five children from Boardman and fifteen Irrigon children are presently enrolled in the acrobatics program. The wrestling program has 32 participants.

South end Director, Debbie Sheirbon recently reported to the commission on programs now underway and the following upcoming events:

— In Heppner, a high school bowling team will get underway on February 6, under the supervision of Charlie Sumner. The team will be open to students in grades nine through 12, said the spokesperson.

— A movie, "A Man Called Flintstone," will be shown at the Heppner Junior High School Gym, February 21 at 3 p.m.

— Colt Basketball is now underway in Heppner with Jim Ackley as director. Students in grades five through eight are eligible to participate, the spokesperson added.

— Lone Pee Wee Basketball started under the direction of Chuck Starr, on January 16 and will continue through February 19. Practices are held every Saturday for students in grades one through five. New short basketball hoops have been purchased as well as other equipment for the young players. Martha Doherty and Del LaRue will assist Starr with the coaching.

More information concerning juvenile programs may be obtained from the directors, concluded the spokesperson.

Wellness Workshop to be held Sat.

Liz Curtis (L), Carol Helphinstine, Brenda Weygandt and team leader Phyllis Payne discuss the Wellness Workshop with Paul Stringer. The workshop will be held Sat., January 30 at the Heppner High School cafeteria, and begins at 8 a.m.

The effort is sponsored by the Heppner Branch of AAUW and The Rolling Hills Run committee for better health and fitness.

Krebs re-elected chairman ECOAC holds 10th annual meeting

Dorothy Krebs

East Central Oregon Association of Counties (ECOAC), held its tenth annual meeting last Thursday, Jan. 21 at the Red Lion Motor Inn in Pendleton, reports Dorothy Krebs, chairwoman.

Krebs said the association voted to assume jurisdiction and provide services for District 12 of the Senior Services Division. Services for the district, which consists of Morrow, Gilliam, Umatilla, Grant and Wheeler counties were previously provided by the Adult and Family Services Division. A large delegation was present to give recommendations that the plan be passed, she added.

The association's annual banquet was held that evening and the following officers were elected: Dorothy Krebs, chairwoman; re-elected; Dale Courtney, mayor of Milton-Freewater was elected vice chairman; and Glenn Findlay, mayor of Ukiah will serve as secretary-treasurer.

Banquet speakers included Morrow County Judge Don McElligott, Hermiston City Manager Tom Harper, Milton-Freewater City Manager Jim Swaine, Port of Morrow Manager Wayne Schwant and Tony Barnhart, executive director of ECOAC.

Scientists to speak on insecticide toxicology

Doctors Frank Dost and James Witt will be in Heppner February 4 to speak on the toxicology of the insecticides proposed for use on the spruce budworm epidemic. The 7:30 meeting will be sponsored by the Morrow County Private Woodlands association at the Columbia Basin Electric Co-op conference room, said Maurice Mitchell, Grant County Extension Forestry Agent.

The insecticides to be discussed are Sevin (carbaryl),

Malathion and Orthene (acephate) — chemicals that have been proposed for use in controlling the current spruce budworm outbreak.

"In the past, this type of information became available to the public only after the control work was completed. By holding the meeting prior to the spraying the public may obtain factual information before the issue becomes clouded with misconceptions and emotionalism," Mitchell stated.

Close to home Mary Ann Cerullo

Early Saturday morning a skiing expedition of approximately fifty teenagers and five adults caravaned their way from Heppner over icy mountains to Mt. Bachelor.

Upon arrival, the group divided itself according to downhill, cross-country, and skiing ability, to go their own ways.

Despite the continuous pouring rain, everyone put in a full day on the slopes and topped it off on the roller skating rink that night in Bend.

It was the next day that the group was rewarded for their previous soggy efforts.

The sun came out, and oh what a glistening sun it was. A surge of energy went through each as the downhill skiers whooped with sheer joy as they sped down the slopes.

I am told that the beauty of that day made some of our friends a little heady.

Three young men in restless excitement struck out on their own cross-country, leaving the designated trail behind. And for their rash act they did what I am sure they were positive they could never do; they got lost.

It is here that I would like to pause in my story and suggest three things one should always remember in case a similar situation should arise as the one described above. This pertains to all outdoor activities, whether skiing, hiking, hunting, camping, or whatever:

- 1) Never split up from your companion (and never go into a wilderness alone!)
- 2) Wear bright colored clothes when you're in the woods. Orange is recommended for best visibility.
- 3) Instead of wandering around and around in circles, find a reasonably comfortable, safe place and stay there. Remember to settle in a place which can be seen from the air.

There are perhaps over a dozen precautions I could list, and there are probably a dozen more that the Search and Rescue Posse would recommend. Instead, I'll leave this at the easy number of "three."

Fortunately, our young Heppner adventurers were found within a few hours of being missed. And the caravan hobbled its way back to arrive on their prospective doorsteps six hours later than expected; but much the wiser, dead beat, and very very happy.

Rape Awareness Class under consideration

The lone Extension Study Group is considering holding a Rape Awareness Class to be presented by the Oregon State Policeman that developed the program.

The class will be presented if at least 45 people will assure attendance, said a spokesperson for the group.

The free class consists of a four hour lecture and discussion with suggestions about situations to avoid, how to handle a rape situation and what a rape victim should do.

The class would also feature printed reference and personal defense demonstrations, the spokesperson continued.

High school and junior high girls are encouraged to sign up for the class but must have written parental permission. Senior citizens are also encouraged to attend, she added.

If at least 45 women sign up, a time and place for the class will be arranged and announced at a later date.

If interested in attending, or for more information, call Nancy Miller, 422-7239 or Kristy Crowell, study group president, 422-7564.
