

Around About By Justine Weatherford

So, public schools here turned their pupils out for summer vacations yesterday afternoon. Most of the students and teachers are probably delighted-but I will miss the interesting programs provided by them during the year.

Last week I spent three pleasant evenings at public schools. On Tuesday, I enjoyed the Junior High musical production "Teen." On Thursday, I took in the good school art show at the elementary's multipurpose room before I cheered for the Spring Music Program at the junior high gymnasium. Friday, I traveled with my friend, Ida Farra, over to Condon to attend commencement exercises for fifteen new high school graduates.

The art show displayed a great variety of work done by pupils of Ron Ferrar. One plaque informed me that Kimberly Hughes was recognized for outstanding art work. The exhibits prepared by younger classes, such as the clay animals and the models of covered wagons were very good.

The musical "Teen" was the first production by a musical-drama class taught by Kitty Coon. Each performer did well and the six-person chorus gave great backing to the solo numbers. The cooperation of several high school students lent strength to the performances of the eighth grade youngsters who now become next year's freshman class. Danny Fortenberry, the drummer, and Leah Cooper, the guitarist, augmented Kitty's lead piano.

On Thursday night, the fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth grade pupils of hand teacher Jim Ackley and vocal teacher Kitty Coon gave a dandy show. The three different band groups that Ackley led showed progressing skills with their instruments. He was especially proud to have eight eighth graders performing as a clarinet ensemble.

Teacher Coon led the Junior High Choir as they sang several numbers, one of which featured a computer which disintegrated. After their performance, she awarded first and second year choir pins to qualifying vocalists.

On Sunday, I returned to Gilliam County to spend the day at Arlington with many residents who attended church, decorated family graves and enjoyed a community potluck dinner together. Although there must have been about 120 persons dining in the basement of the Methodist Church, I learned from friends here that there were nearly four times that many at the Pioneer Memorial Picnic. I also hear from folks how much their visitors admired our city's flag-lined streets.

Friends tell me that they think the crowd seated for dinner Sunday afternoon was probably the largest sit down dinner group ever in this county. I recall the Centennial Picnic at Cecil in 1976 which drew a multitude, but that was not a sit down dinner.

Monday evening I happened to turn on the TV news and saw a segment which was televised by Ray Summers at large in Boardman. It showed Zearl Gillespie making sure that each grave at the cemetery there had two or three flower arrangements (mostly arrangements that Zearl has collected through the years and carefully reuses.) I hope quite a few others in this county also saw this coverage from Boardman.

Perhaps this is going to be the final week of the war over the Falkland Islands. I certainly hope the fighting ends soon. I felt close to that war when I visited with Cathy Jensen and her nephew Stephen Murphy and his wife last week. Now as years pass along, unfortunately, many families in both Argentina and England will have new war dead to remember on Memorial Days.
