UNSUNG HEROES Peer Educators

More than 3.5 million young people throughout the nation have learned how they can help make the next generation a healthier one, thanks to the efforts of a group of students who take the time to be involved.

These students are peer educators who work with chapters of the Future Homemakers of America, a national vocational student organization of home economics students, both boys and girls. Peer educators learn about nutrition, health and the problems of teenage pregnancy, and attend hours of workshops on communication techniques, so that they can share important facts with other young people in their communities.

Being a peer educator doesn't mean you have to make all the presentations — which can range from question and answer sessions to skits and puppet shows — by yourself. Helping out are local resource people — anyone with the information that's needed — such as a March of Dimes representative, a school nurse, dietitian or health teacher.

There will be no charge to attend but donations for refreshments will be accepted, the spokesperson added.

The seminar is sponsored by the Oregon Wheat Foundation and the Oregon State University Extension Service.

churches. The church choir will sing an anthem entitled, "Guide Me, O Thou Great Jehovah," Baker said.

Other July 4 events in Condon include a cowboy breakfast, parade, rodeo, children's games and barbecue.

Everyone is invited to the day of festivities. Anyone needing transportation should contact the Rev. Barker.

What's Your Opinion?

Question: "In your opinion, should the insanity plea be changed or abolished in our criminal justice system?"
 "Yes, I think that a valid case can be made that an attempt at murder does require that the participant would have to be insane. Therefore I don't see how you can have an insanity plea," said Clifford Green, Her-

Now is the time to test pressure canner gauges

By BIRDINE TULLIS
Morrow Co. Extension Service

The season for food preservation is coming quickly with home gardens already beginning to produce.

Proper equipment is necessary for safe home canning of the harvest. Pressure canners with a dial gauge should be tested at least once yearly, or more if heavily used, or if it is suspected that it is not operating accurately. It is a good idea to have the gauge tested before canning season begins.

Some hardware or department stores provide this service for a small fee. A tester is also available from the Wasco and Sherman county extension offices. Only the gauge needs to be taken in for testing.

Canners with a weighted gauge do not require testing. If the weighted gauge is not functioning properly it should be replaced with a new one.

For further information on canning or other food preservation, contact the Morrow Co. extension office.
