

Cattlemen's Assoc., Beef Council move headquarters

After 21 years at the Imperial Hotel in downtown Portland, the Oregon Cattlemen's Association and the Oregon Beef Council have moved their headquarters office to: Red Lion Lloyd Center Hotel, 1000 N.E. Multnomah Street, Portland, Ore. 97232. Their new phone number is (503) 281-3811.

According to OCA Executive Vice President and Beef Council Manager Donald Ostenson, the move was necessitated by the need for increased space. During the past two decades, the Oregon Beef Industry had increased its space at the Imperial on three different occasions. "It was just impossible to obtain any more space at the 'Cattlemen's Hotel,'" Ostenson said. This new office will continue to house the headquarters office of the Oregon Sheep Growers Association. The OSGA has been sharing office space and secretarial help with the cattle industry for the past three years.

The headquarters is housed in the recently opened $43 million Red Lion Lloyd Center Hotel. It is in the former location of the Portland Sheraton Hotel, which was acquired by the Red Lion-Thunderbird Corporation some time ago.

The 69th annual convention of the Oregon Cattlemen's Association will also be held at this new hotel, November 18-20. For room reservations, write the above address or call the Red Lion Lloyd Center Hotel at 281-6111.

Steelhead bag limit increased on Snake River

Following two days of public hearings, the Fish and Wildlife Commission adopted angling regulations for 1983. Although various changes will affect a variety of waters around the state, perhaps of most interest to anglers are some things the Commission did not do, stated a news release from the commission.

The commission did not reduce the annual bag limit for salmon and steelhead. This had been a proposal from within the commission, announced last month, and drew more public testimony than any other subject. There was general opposition to the proposal, and the commission deferred any further consideration of an annual limit reduction until after a statewide steelhead management plan, now being developed, is completed.

Commission proposals for restriction of the sport crab season during part of the year and inclusion of one wild steelhead per day in the bag limit on the Deschutes River upstream from Sherar Falls also were not adopted, the news release continued.

A recommendation from the public to change angling regulations on the North Umpqua River also drew much public comment and was not adopted by the commission. Most angling regulations on the Metolius River will remain the same as last year while the department's fisheries staff continue to monitor the effects of new management directions adopted in 1981, although anglers in the fly-only area will be restricted to the use of barbless hooks in 1983.

Although a statewide bag limit of 15 per day was established for walleye, an earlier staff proposal that no more than five of them be over 20 inches in length be allowed was withdrawn. Staff proposals to close the Kilchis, Nestucca and Wilson rivers to steelhead angling August through October was also withdrawn pending development of the statewide steelhead plan.

On the Deschutes River, a late season for steelhead was established from November 1 through December 31 from Sherar Falls upstream to deadline markers below Pelton regulating dam. Single-point barbless hooks will be required in the lower 100 miles of the river, including the bait area at Sherar Falls.

The general trout season opener will take place on April 23, the same Saturday as in 1981, and the later opening for coastal streams and some other waters was set for May 21.

Regulations for 1983 will be printed in a booklet following the new format adopted last year, and will be available at sporting goods stores well in advance of January 1, 1983, when the new rules take effect, the news release said.

The following are major changes to 1982 angling regulations adopted for 1983 by the Fish and Wildlife Commission. It is recommended that anglers check the new regulations booklet when it becomes available for other minor regulation changes that may affect local waters.

Statewide: — prohibit removal of eggs from sturgeon in the field without retaining the carcass. — establish walleye bag limit: 15 per day. Northwest Zone: — no major changes for 1983. Southwest Zone: — open Applegate River January 1 through March 31 for trout angling. — open South Coos River up to head of tide for year-around salmon angling. — close North Fork Smith River upstream from Johnson Creek for adult chinook salmon October 1 through November 30.

— close Tenmile Lakes for hybrid bass (striped X white bass).

— close South Fork Umpqua for adult chinook salmon October 1 through November 30. Willamette Zone:

— open Clackamas River below Eagle Creek entire year for salmon.

— eliminate angling closure on the Clackamas River at the mouth of Dog Creek.

— open Clackamas River below River Mill Dam and Faraday Powerhouse to angling in May.

— close Kemick Creek for trout angling.

— open McKenzie River below —5 Bridge entire year for whitefish.

Central Zone: — establish 10-inch minimum length for bass in Prineville Reservoir.

— open Deschutes River for steelhead angling from Sherar Falls up to department markers below Pelton reregulating dam November 1 - December 31.

— require the use of single-point barbless hooks from markers below Pelton reregulating dam downstream to mouth for all angling. — add to rule which permits keeping only steelhead with a healed finclip on the Deschutes River, to permit keeping in addition steelhead with stubbed dorsal fins measuring two inches high or shorter. (This permits keeping Idaho hatchery fish which stray into the Deschutes. Idaho achieves the stubbed dorsal fin through hatchery practices so they can be distinguished from wild steelhead.)

— on Hood River, limit steelhead catch to one per day from January 1 through April 22 and from November 1 through December 31. Two per day allowed the rest of the year. (Limits catch on wild winter steelhead; permits more liberal catch on hatchery summer steelhead.)

— barbless hooks required in fly-angling portion of Metolius River.

Northeast Zone: — eliminate angling closure on John Day River at Tumblewater Falls April 1 through August 31, except for salmon and steelhead.

— establish annual limit of ten steelhead from N.E. Zone waters.

— reduce sturgeon bag limit to two per day or in possession, with 48-inch minimum length and 72-inch maximum length.

— close City of La Grande water supply reservoir to all angling.

— close Umatilla River between Threemile Dam and markers 700 feet downstream.

— establish trout and bass limits on Snake River comparable with Idaho and Washington proposals.

Trout: six per day, 10-inch minimum length. Rainbow 20 inches and over are steelhead except from May 16 to August 31 when two rainbow over 20 inches may be included in catch and in possession.

Bass: 10 per day and in possession. No more than three over 17 inches in length.

— reduce minimum length for trout at Mann Lake to 16 inches.

— add to trout catch limit A: In streams of S.E. Zone, five additional brook trout may be taken per day.

Columbia River Zone:

— reduce size limit for trout to 10 inches in Columbia River.

— reduce sturgeon bag limit above Bonneville Dam to two per day or in possession, with 48-inch minimum length and 72-inch maximum length.

— in Columbia River, permit no angling for jack salmon downstream from the Astoria-Megler Bridge while the ocean salmon season is open. (Reduces enforcement problems when both seasons are open but bag limits differ in the two areas.)

Trout: six per day, six-inch minimum length, 12 in possession.

Bass: 10 per day or in possession. No more than three over 17 inches in length.

— reduce minimum length for trout at Mann Lake to 16 inches.

— add to trout catch limit A: In streams of S.E. Zone, five additional brook trout may be taken per day.

Columbia River Zone:

— reduce size limit for trout to 10 inches in Columbia River.

— reduce sturgeon bag limit above Bonneville Dam to two per day or in possession, with 48-inch minimum length and 72-inch maximum length.

— in Columbia River, permit no angling for jack salmon downstream from the Astoria-Megler Bridge while the ocean salmon season is open. (Reduces enforcement problems when both seasons are open but bag limits differ in the two areas.)

Western spruce budworm infestation increases

An annual aerial survey of forest insect conditions shows a serious increase in infestation of the western spruce budworm in Eastern Oregon timber lands, according to Oregon State Forester H. Mike Miller, Bureau of Land Management State Director William G. Leavell and USDA Forest Service Regional Forester Jeff M. Sirmon.

The survey shows the spruce budworm outbreak has grown to more than 1.5 million acres. The outbreak was detected in 1980 on 2,300 acres, and grew to 312,000 acres in 1981.

Involved are forest areas in Morrow, Baker, Union, Umatilla, Grant, Harney, Wheeler, Jefferson, and Crook counties. Most of the infestation is on private lands and the Wallowa-Whitman, Umatilla, Malheur, and Ochoco National Forests with lesser amounts on state and BLM lands.

The state and federal officials said a team of specialists from the Oregon Department of Forestry, the Bureau of Land Management and the Forest Service has begun an environmental analysis of the outbreak to see what action, if any, may be necessary to control the infestation.

The team will consider issues raised by the public in past public meetings on the western spruce budworm as well as other information obtained in consultation with private and public organizations and individuals. Public comment also is sought on what actions should be taken to reduce the danger and damage to Eastern Oregon forest lands, said a Forest Service spokesperson.

The needle-eating insect was first reported in Oregon in 1914 and there have been previous projects to limit its damage. One such successful project was conducted in the Blue Mountains last June and July. This spray project treated 178,549 acres with carbaryl (Sevin-4 Oil) and acephate (Orthene). Forest officials say this area will not need retreatment.

The budworm is a serious defoliator that prefers to eat on grand fir, white fir and Douglas-fir in late June and July when a reddish-brown discoloration of new needles is seen. Epidemics cause decreased tree growth, tree deformity and top killing, and may ultimately kill the tree itself. Outbreaks sometimes build up over vast acreages and may last at least six to 10 years, the forestry officials said.

The environmental analysis of the new outbreak is expected to be completed by January, the officials said, and they would like public comment on possible solutions by December 1. Comments may be sent to Forest Service offices in Portland, Baker, Pendleton, John Day, or Prineville.

BMCC plans annual Ski Swap November 6

Skiers will have an opportunity to buy or sell equipment and clothing at the annual BMCC Ski Swap set for Saturday Nov. 6, at Blue Mountain Community College in Pendleton.

Goods for the swap will be received at the college Thursday and Friday before the event from 5 to 8 p.m. in Morrow Hall, room seven. The swap will also take place in room seven.

Sponsors of the event are the members of BMCC's Ski Club. The club collects a commission on each sale which goes toward club trips and projects.

Computer demo slated

Don Fritzberg, of Agri-Business Computers of The Dalles, will give a demonstration on computer software for farm management and record keeping at Heppner High School on Thursday, Nov. 4, at 7 p.m. The demonstration will be held in room six.

Anyone interested is invited to attend. For more information, contact Roger Records, 676-9138.

The United States has about one-fourth of the world's estimated recoverable coal reserves.
