

Students start business

Last Chance Manufacturing open for business in Ione

A new business, Last Chance Manufacturing, has opened its doors for business in Ione.

You won't find its offices on Main Street, however, as it was set up, and is totally run, by students at Ione High School.

From a computerized book-keeping system, to the sale of shares, to the actual manufacturing of goods, students have used the experience to learn how a business starts and operates in a community.

Two projects the students have undertaken so far include a "spirit pack," made up of a bumper sticker, button and a penant with the school name and emblem on them. The packs were sold at football games this year.

"It worked out pretty good," said Vince McElligott, one of the seven students who formed the company. "We still have some left but we will probably sell them during basketball."

The other product the company is now making, is a number of metal woodholders for the home.

The students are using a jig scroll to build 22 of the holders, which they are selling around town. "We'll be at Artifactory," says Roger Morter. He said the holders sell for $21.50 and take about three hours to make.

"We use the scroll to square up the edges and make the welds," McElligott explained. He says this keeps the racks the same and makes a better product.

The brainchild of Ione High School teachers Bob Deeter and Marv Peterson, Last Chance Manufacturing has taught the students valuable lessons in how the business world operates. Deeter told the Morrow County School Board during a presentation last Monday.

To start off the company, the students, who in addition to McElligott and Morter include Sharon Crowell, Daria Anglin, Craig Hams, Scott Barnett and Dennis Papineau, had to go out into the community and sell stock.

They sold 185 shares in the company for one dollar each, and used the money to buy raw materials for their projects.

The students also use a Radio Shack computer at the school to compute inventory, keep the books and figure payroll. They are each paid 25 cents per day for their work.

Marketing of their products has not been neglected either.

The students are now in the process of making etched mirrors, which will sell for five to seven dollars. "They have solid oak frames and would make great Christmas gifts," Morter pointed out.

Anyone wishing to buy either the mirrors or a wood rack, just call Ione High, and ask for Last Chance Manufacturing.

There are three stages in the useful life of a coconut. Young sprouts provide salad, green nuts yield coconut milk and the mature ones offer solid "meat."

Vince McElligott (left) and Roger Morter show one of wood racks built by Last Chance Manufacturing Co. of Ione High School. The racks sell for $21.50. One rack is on display at the Bank of Eastern Oregon in Ione, and others will be available at Artifactory.

Special entertainment planned at Scout meeting

Cub Scouts, Webelos and Boy Scouts from the Heppner, Lexington and Ione area will hold a monthly pack meeting November 29, 7 p.m., at the Heppner Elk's Lodge. Den four is to provide entertainment.

Special arrangements have been made by Den four den mothers Sandy Devin and Joy Krein to have Janie Pond's ceremonial dancers from the Umatilla Indian Reservation. Ten dancers and five drummers in full Indian costume will be part of the performance. This is the first time that special out-of-town entertainment has been arranged for the pack meeting, the spokesperson said.

Den four asks all Cub Scouts and their families to be at the lodge promptly at 7 p.m. so the ceremonial dance can begin soon after. Regular Cub Scout business will take place immediately after the presentation, she said.

Local publishers judge Idaho newspapers

David and April Sykes, publishers of the Heppner Gazette-Times and the Boardman Enterprise, were judges in a newspaper contest held last Friday at the Red Lion Motor Inn in Pendleton.

The Sykes helped judge weekly newspapers from Idaho entered in the Idaho Newspaper Publishers Association Better Newspaper Contest.

The judging was arranged through the Oregon Newspaper Publishers Association.
