

'Creative Aging' program slated in Pendleton

"Losses and Changing with Aging" will be the topic of Extension Specialist Dr. Vicki Schmall for a "Creative Aging" program co-sponsored by Umatilla County Extension Service, Foster Grandparents and Senior Companions program on October 18, 1983, announced Dawn C. Hawkins, extension home economist. This program is designed for family and professional caregivers and will cover working with the elderly as they face losses and changes in their lives. This free program will begin at 10 a.m. in the Vert Clubroom in Pendleton. It is scheduled to conclude at 12 noon.

At 1:15 p.m. Dr. Schmall will present a program entitled "Endless Night, Endless Mourning—living with Alzheimers." This program will cover what alzheimers is, and will give guidance to dealing with the impact of this disease on family members and caregivers, said Mrs. Hawkins.

Dr. Schmall is currently the OSU Extension Service gerontology specialist, and prior to 1978 she directed the OSU Program on Gerontology for three years.

Not only has she coordinated four statewide conferences on aging, but she also has conducted more than 50 gerontology workshops for public service agencies as part of her involvement with gerontology at OSU.

She received her Ph.D. in family life with an emphasis on gerontology from OSU. Born in Spokane, Wash., she studied home economics education at the University of Washington before receiving her bachelor's degree in home economics education and health from Montana State University.

Dr. Schmall was named Oregon's Outstanding Young Woman of America in 1978. That was the year she received a two-year grant from the National Council on Aging to develop a national demonstration project using university students to fill gaps in community services to the elderly.

Dr. Schmall has contributed chapters to several books on aging, and is the author or co-author of numerous publications and articles on various aspects of aging, said Mrs. Hawkins.

New drinking & driving laws to take effect Sat.

Tougher laws will face people who drink and then drive beginning Saturday, Oct. 15, even though major anti-drinking driver legislation passed by the 1983 Legislature still is nearly nine months away from taking effect, announced the Oregon Dept. of Transportation's Motor Vehicle Division.

Laws on drinking drivers are not the only new or changed laws drivers need to know to stay out of trouble on streets and highways, according to the Motor Vehicle Division. Changes also take effect October 15 in rules of the road, police authority to cite and arrest drivers, grounds for license suspension, and action required against uninsured drivers.

Laws take effect that day to ground for five years, drivers convicted of crimes such as manslaughter or criminally negligent homicide, and to suspend or deny driving privileges for actions that have not previously meant loss of a license.

The following are some of the changes drivers need to know:

Drinking Drivers
The level at which a driver is considered "under the influence of alcohol" drops from 0.10 percent to 0.08 percent. In other words, it will take fewer drinks for most drivers to get to the "unsafe" level for driving.

Another change allows a chemical test to be taken without a person's consent if a police officer has probably cause to believe the person was driving under the influence and that the tests will reveal that fact. This law applies when the person is unconscious or otherwise in a condition that makes him or her incapable of expressly consenting to the test or tests requested.

Police also may obtain a test of the blood to determine alcohol content, or a test of blood or urine, or both, to determine if drugs are present if a person expressly consents to the test or tests.

Most drivers, however, will continue to run afoul of the implied consent law. It applies only to breath tests to determine if or how much a driver has been drinking. Drivers who refuse a breath test in certain off-highway locations, such as shopping center parking lots, will face a 120-day license suspension under the new law. In the past, the law applied only to public highways.

Still another change tightens provisions on who may avoid a D.U.I. (driving under the influence of intoxicants) conviction on the record by agreeing with a court to divert to an alcohol education or treatment program. It is aimed at closing what some officials have considered loopholes in the 1981 law.

One new law is aimed squarely at trying to convince young people to stay from alcohol and drugs. It allows a court to order the Motor Vehicle Division to deny driving privileges for periods of time ranging from 90 days up to several years.

This happens if anyone between the ages of 13 and 17 is convicted or determined by a court to commit any crime, violation or infraction involving possession, use or abuse of alcohol or controlled substances. Driving a motor vehicle may not even be involved in the offense.

Proponents of the measure said in legislative hearings that they believe it will help deter young people from these offenses because of the importance most young people place on getting their first driver's license.
