Large supplies, strong competition expected to hold wheat prices down

By BOB COSTA
OSU Extension Agent
Morrow County

Large wheat supplies and strong competition on the international market will hold wheat prices down. The following is a mid-December wheat market report from Jim Cornelius, OSU Extension Service economist:

World, national, and regional supplies of wheat are at or near record levels. Wheat production world-wide has been increasing for the past several years, and this will likely continue into 1984-85. The demand, or utilization of wheat has also been increasing, but at a slower rate. The result is a steady increase in carryover stocks, and about 40 percent of the carryover stocks are held by the United States.

Australia, the principle competitor with the Pacific Northwest in international white wheat markets, is expected to have a record crop of 19 to 20 million metric tons (700 to 735 million bushels) with harvest presently under way. As a result, expect strong competition in the export markets, possibly resulting in even lower farm-level prices in order to move supplies.

White wheat prices inched downward over the past month, and stood at about $3.80 per bushel, Portland, as of mid-December. This price is below the loan rate offered by the farm program, possibly as a result of P.I.K. wheat hitting the market prior to the expiration of free storage in January. Export demand has remained fairly light in the Northwest although farm selling was reported to have increased slightly, especially payment-in-kind entitlements.

Looking forward in the 1984-85 crop year, future prospects appear sobering. World wheat production is not likely to decline among competing wheat growing nations. The strong U.S. dollar tends to restrict U.S. wheat exports, but it also encourages wheat production overseas. Our competitors — Australia and Canada for example — were receiving relatively higher prices for wheat in 1983 over 1982. This will likely lead to continued high production in these countries in the coming year.

U.S. production of 2.8 billion bushels in 1984 is a distinct possibility, unless there is greater participation in the farm program. There is still some hope for an "eleventh hour" change in the 1984 wheat program that would reduce planted acreage. However, if participation in the program is low, as appears likely, even the reduced 1984 loan rate, about $3.60 to $3.65 per bushel, Portland, may not provide a price floor in the Northwest.

Oregon begins Medically Needy Program

A new statewide program will provide medical care for children and pregnant women in low-income, single-parent families that don't qualify for welfare. The "Medically Needy" Program, passed by the 1983 Oregon Legislature, went into effect January 1, announced the Department of Human Resources, Adult and Family Services Division.

While the Oregon Adult and Family Services Division (A.F.S.) will administer the program, it will only cover people who have too much in income or assets to qualify for welfare payments. The program only covers medical expenses. It does not include cash payments to participants.

Children who are eligible for the program qualify for a full range of medical services, including doctor and dentist visits, hospitalization and prescription drugs. Eligible women will qualify for pregnancy-related services only.

To qualify, children must be deprived of parental support because one of their parents is absent or disabled. To qualify for pregnancy care, women must be single or, if married, living with a disabled spouse, the division said.

To qualify, an individual family can't have income more than one-third higher than the amount a household their size would receive in welfare benefits under the Aid to Dependent Children (A.D.C.) Program. For example, a parent and two children could receive a maximum of $368 a month in A.D.C. Under the Medically Needy Program, a parent and two children with up to 1490 in gross income would qualify for medical help although they would not qualify on welfare.

A family whose income is more than one-third higher than A.D.C. standards may still qualify if their medical bills would reduce their income to that level. If medical bills would reduce their income to within one-third of A.D.C. standards during a six-month period, they could qualify for help with remaining medical expenses during the rest of that period. This procedure is called "spending down" to qualify for the Medically Needy Program, the division explained.

Adult men and nonpregnant women do not qualify for the program. Children in two-parent households don't qualify unless a parent is disabled. Pregnant women living with spouses don't qualify unless one is disabled. However, prenatal care may be available through county health departments under a new program administered through the State Health Division.

People who may be eligible can apply for the Medically Needy Program at their local Adult and Family Services Division branch office. In south Morrow County A.F.S. representative Janet Phillips may be contacted at the Heppner Neighborhood Center on the first, third and fourth Wednesdays of each month between 9 a.m. and 12 noon. She may also be reached at the Condon A.F.S. office, 384-2882.

The 1983 Legislature appropriated $4.2 million in state money for the program; the addition of $5.6 million in federal money will fund the 18-month program at almost $10 million.

MarketLine offered by OSU

With the arrival of Extension MarketLine, more Oregon farmers and ranchers may be getting down to business by sitting down and turning on their television sets.

The Oregon State University Extension Service and Oregon Public Broadcasting are cooperating to bring current agricultural market prices and other agricultural news to Oregon TV. This new service is called "Extension MarketLine" and it is intended to help farmers and ranchers manage their businesses more effectively.

Before the TV will receive the MarketLine signal, the viewer must attach a special decoder to the set.

Decoders are offered by Oregon Public Broadcasting at $265 per unit; they are also available commercially. Decoders may be ordered directly from Oregon Public Broadcasting, 2828 SW Front Street, Portland, Oregon 97201.

For more information on Extension MarketLine, write to: Extension Market News, Extension Hall, Room 219, OSU, Corvallis, Oregon 97331. In 1983-84, Extension MarketLine is made possible through a grant from the Oregon Wheat Commission.
