The Fifth Quarter

Sports by Mike Oths

Going through the sports potpourri for the week, the netherworld seems to have a grip on big events. Most of us could go on vacation for another month and not miss anything in the winding road of the playoffs in basketball and hockey. The NBA could very well stretch into mid-June, while the Stanley Cup playoffs could nudge into the late stages of May.

(For those who wonder why hockey has never caught on in most parts of the country, we need only to consider the challenge of keeping the rink frozen in Phoenix at this time of year.)

In the NBA playoffs, there have been a few "surprises." New Jersey's success against Philadelphia has to raise a few eyebrows, even if the '76ers do seem far less impressive than last year. At this writing, Phoenix leads the Blazers 2-1, which over the course of the season would seem to be an upset. Realistically, however, the Suns came into the playoffs on a roll, while the Blazers were on their worst streak of the season. A major explanation for the much-ballyhooed fact that nobody has repeated as NBA champ in 15 years is that momentum is everything these days. Too many factors need to be there for a title-winning run, especially when one considers that a team may now have to play as many as 26 games in the playoffs alone.

In the Stanley Cup matchups, it will be Montreal vs. The Islanders and Edmonton vs. Minnesota. Only Montreal can be termed a surprise team, but the difficulty that the Gretzky-led Oilers experienced reaching the semis is a major upset. Edmonton had beaten Calgary 8 times out of 8 in the regular season, but needed all 7 to win the quarterfinals. The Islanders needed an overtime victory in the first round, or they would have been out at the hands of the Rangers. Look for the Isles streak to stop at four cups, and look for Edmonton to do it to them.

For those of you who follow tennis, Sunday's match between Martina Navratilova and Chris Evert-Lloyd had to be an eye-opener. We all knew that they were the two best; we all knew that Navratilova had been getting the best of the matchups (9 straight wins); but nobody could foresee the pasting that Evert-Lloyd took on clay. Keep in mind that her lifetime pro record on clay was 221-4, and that she hadn't lost in a few years. Navratilova blasted her by the count of 6-2, 6-0. That score is roughly similar to spotting Jack Nicklaus three a side in the U.S. Open, or giving Carl Lewis a ten-yard headstart in the 100 meters. It just isn't supposed to happen. It will be quite a while before anybody even suggests that the Czech-turned-Yankee netter is anything but the absolute best in her sport.

It was nice to see Ben Crenshaw with the Masters golf tournament. Forget the talk about him putting pressure on himself to win the big ones—he just seems like a nice guy who didn't finish last, for once.

David Palmer's five-inning perfect game is one of those breaks that go the right way, sometimes. In the history of baseball, there have been 16 official perfect games. This is one of them, and will be duly recorded at the Hall of Fame. I wonder how many games have had five perfect innings and then gone down the pipe? About the same number as bowlers who got the first five or six strikes, but didn't come up with a rain delay. If I can get a second-frame rain delay, I'll be in business.

Thought for the day: How warped are the people who are writing the vicious letters to the 'Oregonian' and blaming the newspaper for (a) the NCAA investigation and (b) the fact that U of O signed several top basketball prospects. I'm waiting for them to figure out a way to blame the OSU football program on the 'Oregonian'. Anybody who can pull that off should apply for a job to help balance the federal budget.
