

Ione artist paints at Main St. studio

Shirley McNary puts finishing touches on a landscape.

Shirley McNary has been painting "two or three afternoons a week" at her studio on Main Street in Ione for about a year now. She and her family came to the Gooseberry area in 1969 where her husband farms. Her studio was at their home until they moved into town and did not have the space for her kiln and easel.

She does china painting, oil painting, and has recently begun painting with water colors. "Anybody can paint," she says, "if they want to spend time and effort." She says that she always wanted to draw and couldn't so she decided to learn to paint; then when a neighbor came with a painting, she decided that she could do it, too.

McNary used to take her work to artist's shows, in the Tri-Cities, Columbia Center, and the July Sidewalk show in Richland, but no longer shows much of her work beyond Morrow County Fair. Her surroundings are not that important, she says as long as they're not too depressing. Good light which doesn't glare is necessary as well as ventilation, because the oil paints and thinner can be dangerous. Her equipment, she says is "mostly inspiration and time." This spring, golf lessons, her square dancing and two grandchildren have taken part of her time.

If she hasn't painted for a while, she says that ideas and inspiration come slowly, "but once she gets started, she has more ideas than she can finish. Sometimes she works with a frame she has purchased and decides what to put in it, and sometimes she does the picture first and then finds a suitable frame.

Describing her china painting, she says "the most fun is designing it and deciding what, where, and how," then she does all the work free-hand. The china painting is somewhat slower than other forms because it requires a first painting to sketch then baking in the kiln, a second painting for detail and third painting for finishing and baking in the kiln between each. "Several more coats of paint and bakings may follow, depending ..." and her worst critic? "Me, because I need to be."

She enjoys both her china painting and oil painting and sometimes thinks she would be "better at one if I could give up the other, but I can't give up either." Using water colors she says is similar to
