FARMING facts & fancies

Though most milking today is done by machine, in the days when cows were milked by hand it was usually done from the right side. The reason is that most dairy farmers have been right-handed since the dawn of the dairy business. It's easier for a right-handed milker to work from Bosay's right side. Makes no difference to the cow, as long as the milker's hands aren't too cold.

America's dairy and beef cattle are likely to be a lot happier from now on. The reason for this lies in plastic ear tags that many cattle are sporting these days. The new tags are impregnated with an insecticide called Ectrin. Ectrin is lethal to horn flies, face flies, Gulf Coast ticks, and Spinox ear ticks, which bother cattle, therefore, greatly reducing their milk and beef production.

It's said that a hen cackles after laying an egg in order to call her mate's attention to the "fowl" deed. Other roosters start crowing, trying to take credit for something they had nothing to do with.
