

Game distribution complete; W.O.W. begins 'sprout route'

On March 1, Wings of Work, Ione High School entrepreneurship class, held an open house for their customers. The open house was considered a success by W.O.W. because most of the Morrowopoly games which they had printed sold that night, said a W.O.W. spokesperson.

A prototype of an octagon game table made with a cushioned felt center, oak trim and a tray for miscellaneous items was on display. Class members took orders for tables as well as the other products which they have for sale.

Samples of sprouts were served to advertise the class' new project, a sprout route. Completely different from all other projects undertaken in the last three years, the sprout route requires W.O.W. to grow mung, radish, cabbage, mustard and alfalfa sprouts.

The evening's open house was completed with awards: W.O.W. Sales Manager Rod Taylor presented Betty Carlson with a T-shirt thanking her for selling a large number of Morrowopoly games; W.O.W. Production Manager Eric Cook presented W.O.W. advisors Anna Morford and Marvin Peterson with T-shirts for the help they have given the student corporation. The doorprize, a Morrowopoly game, was won by Tanna Padberg.
