

Growers travel to Condon for wheat seminar

Dr. Russ Karow, OSU Extension Agronomist, outlined a 15 point program to better wheat production at the annual Extension Wheat Seminar in Condon last Thursday.

The 15 factors outlined by Karow included using quality seed, controlling weeds, managing for moisture, and being a good custodian of the soil.

Also on the program were Extension Soils Specialist Don Wysocki, who outlined the STEEP Program, Extension Plant Pathologist Paul Koepsell discussing root diseases of cereals and seed treatments, USDA-ARS researcher Ron Rickman, and seed certification specialists Greg Vollmer, and Ron Cook.

"The Wheat Seminar is a cooperative effort by both Morrow and Gilliam Counties," said Fred Lundin, Agricultural Extension Agent in Morrow County. "Last year it was held here, and this year is was in Condon. Next year it will again be held locally."

Eric Anderson and Joe Halvorsen held a wheat cleaning demonstration at lunchtime. Using an indent type of cleaner, they cleaned goat-grass, barley, and other foreign matter from a sample of winter wheat.

Dr. Rickman discussed a wheat model which used growing degree days (GDD) as a hardstick to measure wheat growth. Growing degree days is the average daily temperature converted to centigrade. All positive values are added to obtain the cumulative GDD's for the crop. The GDD's can be used as a predictor to determine when the plant will reach certain growth stages. This can be used as a management tool to determine herbicide application, fertilizer top dressing, etc.

About 40 producers attended the meeting. Anyone interested in more information concerning the subjects discussed is encouraged to call the County Extension Office, 676-9642.
