Boeing may pave PGE access road, says planning commission chairman

If Boeing Corp. permanently closes a road which provides access to Portland General Electric Coal fire plant near Boardman, it will pave another access road, says John Bristow, Morrow County Planning Commission chairman.

According to Bristow, Boeing wants to close the existing road during the nightime-only for a period of six months. During that time a temporary road will provide access to the plant. After the six-month time period, Boeing will make a decision as to whether to close the road permanently. If the road is closed, Boeing has said it will pave a road to provide access, said Bristow.

Jack Strege, PGE's coal fire plant administrative supervisor, says that closure of Tower Road will affect two work shifts at the plant, (approximately 15 to 25 people,) and "anybody coming into the plant." Strege said that Boeing has made repairs to the temporary access road which is both gravel and paved, but the route is about three miles longer than the Tower Road access to the plant.

In a recent meeting in Seattle with Jim Carriveau, vice president of Boeing Agricultural Industrial Company (BAIC) and Earl Bowden, president of BAIC and director of facilities for Boeing, Bristow and Morrow County Judge Louis Carlson learned that Boeing is proposing closure of the road because of sensitive testing in the area. According to Bristow, Boeing wants to minimize signal interference to antennas. The road would be closed from 5:30 p.m. to 6:30 a.m., the time during which the testing would be conducted.

Bristow said that "there was some talk of using counters" to determine the number of cars using Tower Road, but, he said, "it is in the conditional use permit that if they (Boeing) did close the road, they would have to build another of comparable quality." According to Morrow County Planner Deane Seeger, until the road is closed and no other access of comparable quality provided, there is no violation of Boeing's conditional use permit.
