

Volunteer 4-H leaders are Grrreat!

Volunteers are like Frosted Flakes...they're great, said Birdine Tullis of the Morrow County Extension Service. April 20-27, volunteers are being celebrated nationwide for the contributions that they make in their communities.

Did you know that the dollar value of volunteer contributed time is conservatively estimated at $65 billion. That's right, and there's no better example of success than the Cooperative Extension System, commonly known as the Extension Service. A recent study shows 2.9 million people (or one out of every 80 people in the U.S.) volunteer to assist the Extension Service each year. The dollar value of these volunteers time is 4.5 billion dollars or more than five times the total budget of the cooperative Extension System.

Who are these people? In Morrow County they are 4-H leaders, home economics study group members, family community leadership members and many other local resource people. They are often involved in other community organizations and events as well. Extension Service volunteers come in all shapes and sizes, are all ages, some live in town, others live in the suburbs or on farms. But always, they are friendly folks who smile a lot because they enjoy what they're doing.

Why do these people volunteer their time and energy to the Extension Service? There are lots of reasons, but one of the primary ones centers around the fact that the Extension Service trains their volunteers. Each volunteer has the opportunity to learn what it is they are going to do and how they'll do it before getting started.

Volunteer 4-H leaders will tell you that they teach more than sewing, cooking, or horsemanship. They teach young people life skills—skills they'll use as adults—and they help young people learn responsibility, self-confidence and a sense of pride about project work. As a result 4-H members become productive, involved citizens and tomorrow's leaders.

If you want to find out how you can help—how you can become involved with 4-H, contact the County Extension Office, at Heppner, 676-9642 or Annex Office, Irrigon. Get your children involved in 4-H. Volunteer your time and talents as a 4-H leader. Provide access to your resources to help educate 4-H members. Get involved. 4-H will promise you a better, stronger community, Tullis said.
