Forest service jobs opening soon

For the first time, all new applicants for temporary summer jobs with the Forest Service will be hired through state employment offices in Oregon and Washington next year.

"This is a program designed to find new temporary employees through a network of offices which are organized to match people with jobs," said Neil Opsal, director of personnel management for the agency's Pacific Northwest Region. Traditionally, the Forest Service has distributed applications and hired temporary employees through its own administrative offices.

During last year's field season just over 1,000 temporary Forest Service jobs in Oregon and Washington were filled with new employees. Another 3,000 temporary jobs were filled with rehires. About the same number (1,000) jobs are expected to be available for "new hires" in the 1988 field season. Competition for the jobs often is great, with as many seven people applying for each position.

"Information on specific job openings will be available when the positions are being filled. Applicant should go to local offices of the Oregon State Employment Division and the Washington State Employment Security Division," Opsal said. "Most units will begin filling jobs about March 1, and will continue to do so until about mid-June."

Persons interested in temporary, field-going aid and technician positions at grades GS-1 through GS-7 must apply at their local state employment office. The Forest Service will continue to fill permanent positions through its own personnel offices.

Public meeting scheduled for input on forest plan

Persons interested in helping the State of Oregon develop its coordinated response to the Umatilla National Forest's Draft Environmental Impact Statement and Proposed Forest Plan are invited to attend a public meeting scheduled for January 11, 1988 at 7:30 p.m. in the City Hall Chambers, 34 S.E. Dorion St., Pendleton.

Norm Johnson, Governor Neil Goldschmidt's federal plans coordinator, will conduct the meeting. This meeting is part of a process established by the Governor's Executive Order requiring state agencies to coordinate their responses to the plans of the 13 national forests in Oregon. This meeting is not part of the USDA Forest Service's Public review process. The state agencies want to hear from Oregonians on the issues citizens believe the state should address in its comments.

State agencies will briefly explain the issues they have identified in the Umatilla plan. Following this, a number of panels reflecting different perspectives on the forest plan will speak, including local government, timber industry, environmental organizations, plus others. Comments from the general public will then be heard.

A listing of issues that the state agencies have identified in the Umatilla plan will be available for public review beginning Jan. 8, 1988 at the Pendleton office of the Oregon State Department of Forestry, 1055 Airport Rd.
