

Volunteers make Hotel a 'Community Project'

Look familiar? This is the Bank of Eastern Oregon's own Pat Gentry, handling a board at the hotel project on Saturday. Good work Patty!

Jim Wishart helps Cornett Green tear a beam down off the wall on the inside of the Heppner Hotel on Saturday. Plan to attend the next workday this Saturday, February 6.

This picture of the hotel is the architect's rendition of what the old Heppner Hotel looked like when it was built. The Historical Society has approved the hotel as an historical site and as such, must be restored as closely as possible to the original.

"The response from the community was wonderful, the spirit and effort put into the tearing down of the interior of the hotel was great," said Bill Kuhn, organizer of the workday held last Saturday, January 30, at the Heppner Hotel.

The day began at 9 a.m. with approximately 60 people showing up to help. A great deal was accomplished with most of the walls being torn out. There are still a few walls on the first floor to be removed. Around 30-35 people worked in the afternoon to complete the day.

Lunch was served at the Elk's by the Senior Citizens. Fifty-seven people were served a stew lunch.

It was noted that $50,000 was saved by the community responding to the plea to help with this worthwhile project.

The community is invited to help this Saturday, February 6, with another workday to do general clean-up. The materials that were removed last week will need to be hauled off and complete the removal of the walls. "This should pretty well finish up what the architect requested us to do," announced Bill.

Bob Isted is loading scrap lumber from the inside of the hotel onto a truck at the community workday.

The sign in the window of the Heppner Hotel proclaims that the Oregon Community Development Program is participating in the restoration of the hotel for a senior housing development. They have designated $500,000 to the project.
