Where's the Line?

A south county wheat farmer dropped by a Boardman coffee shop for a cup with a bunch of alfalfa growers the other day.

The conversation eventually got around to where to draw the line.

Some advocated the base line, but in any event no farther north than the south end of the bombing range. That way the north could claim the coal plant. The suggestion that maybe it should be Wilson Road so the south could claim the coal plant died when the residence of a couple of real estate brokers was established.

All agreed that a great deal was at stake. Like knowing who the enemy is. Doubt was cast in a number of directions. There's that dry land farmer at Sand Hollow who grows irrigated potatoes. And a prominent member of the road committee who put center pivots on former wheat land. Someone suggested the crops grown rather than place of residence would be a good criteria. That must clearly put logging and sawmilling in the south, except for chip haulers and handlers.

Wheat didn't work either since river bound transportation was in the wrong end.

Attitudes about the past and the future was suggested. Maybe that would mean that a county judge with the far sighted pheasant ranch would change sides with a commissioner who's looking for the Oregon Trail.

It was a complex inquiry and no firm conclusions drawn. But generally a well recognized endeavor of importance. All agreed that in order to have a good north-south battle, everyone would have to be on one side or the other. And it wouldn't do to just chose up sides.

Maybe a board or commission could be appointed to draw the line. Representation would have to be balanced, of course. No one volunteered.

With a degree of consternation about the subject, the conversation turned to something else. Eventually everyone went on to work.

The wheat farmer bought the coffee though. It was raining, you see.

Letters to the Editor

June is Nat'l Pest Control month

To the Editor:

Many people do not realize the importance pesticides have on their every day lives. Where would this country be if it were not for the use of safe and effective chemicals on our crops, restaurants, food storage facilities, hospitals and public environment? We, in America, don't stop to think about how we would like to live in other countries, who are not as fortunate and advanced as the United States is in coping with infestations of insects, rodents and disease. Take a moment and reflect on the many ways we use pesticides each day. Pest control operators are dedicated to make sure these chemicals are used safely and effectively.

Thanks for the opportunity to help educate the public about the safety and proper use of chemicals. Jepsen Pest Control, Inc. is a member of the National Pest Control Association and the Pest Control Operators of Oregon. We constantly attend seminars and conferences to keep informed about the proper use and application of pesticides. We appreciate being able to offer information, advice and our services at any time.

Sincerely,
(s) John & Jean Jepsen
