Public Comments on Mule Deer Plan

hunters.

A survey conducted in conjunction with the plan indicated that many mule deer hunters are dissatisfied with present mule deer management efforts. Of the hunters contacted, over 55 percent rated their chances of bagging a buck at either poor or extremely poor. When asked if they thought ODFW was doing a good job of managing mule deer populations, only 25 percent agreed. Only 30 percent agreed that ODFW was adequately managing mule deer hunters.

A series of public-comment meetings held in key communities statewide last July and August brought almost 900 concerned hunters forward to help with the construction of the new plan through public involvement, criticism and suggestions. In September of this year, a special, pre-selected public working group was then assembled to scrutinize the concerns of the hunting public and to work with the department in the formation of possible solutions. In the public's opinion of order of importance, the top 10 concerns were:

1. Degradation and loss of mule deer habitat.
2. Hunter densities are too high in some areas, causing overcrowding.
3. Post-season buck ratios are below Fish and Wildlife Commission accepted management objectives.
4. Lack of public access to land-locked public and private lands.
5. Present land uses on public and private lands limit winter-range management options.
6. Winter range ownership patterns limit management options.
7. Inadequate information on population dynamics, deer movements, and harvest statistics to manage mule deer intensively.
8. Lower than desired yearling recruitment.
9. Controlled buck hunting displaces hunters.
10. No control over nonresident hunter numbers. Other issues which came up frequently or were of strong local concern, but which did not rank highly in overall importance included:

1. Concerns over Native American hunting rights.
  2. No control over number of western Oregon hunters hunting in eastern Oregon.
  3. Eliminate antlerless deer hunting.
  4. Voluntary planting of bitterbrush by furnishing packets of seed to hunters to disperse while hunting.
  5. Close seasons in problem units to let deer herds recover.
  6. Develop a report card system to aid with harvest survey.
- Solutions proposed by the Public Working Group ranged from offering landowners federal incentives such as Conservation Reserve Programs (CRP) to increase habitat and hunter access, to dispersing hunter numbers by offering a diversity of hunting opportunities (wilderness hunts, different weapon types, etc.).

The latest revision of the plan was offered for review at several public meetings in early November. Unfortunately, the ODFW release listing the dates and locations of the meetings was not received by this writer in time for publication; a similar misfortune occurred prior to the first set of public meetings.

The completed mule deer management plan goes before the Oregon Fish and Wildlife Commission on December 5, 1990. If adopted, it will be implemented with the 1991 deer season.
