Just like they swept through the league this year, the Heppner Mustang football team captured 17 of the 31 spots on the Columbia Basin Conference All Star first team. The selections were made by the league coaches after the season concluded.

Senior Rick Osmin was named to an unheard of four spots on the first team-linebacker, running back, punter and place kicker. Osmin led the Mustangs with 468 yards rushing on 65 carries for a 7.2 yard average. He was also named the most valuable player for the season by a vote of his teammates.

Jason Britt, a junior, was named on the first team as a wide receiver and a linebacker. Britt was one of the leading defensive point leaders and had several exceptional games, including the league championship game against Umatilla.

Brandon Pedro was a first team selection at defensive back and wide receiver. Pedro had five interceptions on the year and caught four touchdown passes. Pedro was named best lineman by his teammates.

Cory Grabeel was named to the first team as a defensive end and a running back. Cory was named outstanding back by his peers and gained 451 yards on the season.

Kevin Bond was a first team offensive and defensive lineman and had a solid senior season.

Doug Devin was a first team selection as a defensive back and second team running back. Devin led the team in defensive points for the season and was voted most inspirational by the team. Devin "played the game like it should be played," according to coach Grant.

The Mustangs third first team all star defensive back was Bob Krein. Bob was a second team quarterback pick and anyone who saw the Mustangs play this year saw Bob Krein get better and better as the season progressed.

Jake Maben was selected first team defensive end and honorable mention center. Jake showed much improvement through the year.

Al Burt, despite missing several games in the middle of the season, was a first team offensive lineman.

Jim Kindle, a junior, completed a sweep of the defensive front with a first team selection.

Jay Michael was an honorable mention defensive back for the Mustangs.

Team awards were announced and letters were given at the sports dessert Tuesday, November 13 at the high school.

Ah, falltime. Though the diverse opportunities available to eastern Oregon sportsmen right now include some of the year's finest fishing, most boats have already been parked and countless fishing rods have been swapped for rifles or shotguns in order to take advantage of the region's long-awaited hunting seasons.

Sadly, scarcely another thought will be given to many of these parked boats-until next spring, that is, when their owners cough up hard-earned dollars to pay for repairs that could easily have been avoided, had the motors been properly winterized.

"First of all, it really shouldn't be called winterization," says expert marine mechanic Barry Hoffer, service manager of The Boat Shop in Richland, Washington. "It should be called 'off-season storage,' because some people use their boats more in the wintertime than they do in the summertime."

Hoffer said many of the repairs he performs each year would not have been necessary if only these simple, pre-storage precautions had been taken:

- * For boats with built-in fuel tanks, prevent condensation by filling the tank to within a gallon of its maximum capacity (to allow for expansion) and add a good-quality fuel stabilizer.
 - * Run the engine (while in the water or with a water hose attached) at medium-low rpms until normal operating temperatures are reached. With it still running, fog the engine by spraying a commercial outboard fogging oil directly into the throats of the carburetors. This prevents damage-causing rust and pitting. Use enough oil to create a good deal of smoke from the exhaust, but not enough to immediately kill the motor. On motors without fuel injection, disconnect the fuel line and continue to spray until the motor runs out of gas. This way the engine gets fogged while excess fuel is cleared from the carburetors.
 - * Lubricate all grease fittings—including trailer bearings—with a good, water-repellent grease.
 - * Drain and refill the oil in the lower unit (gear housing). This should not be left empty, as condensation can form and cause pitting on internal bearings and gears. When draining, check for water in the old oil. If water is discovered, have the gear case pressure-tested by your outboard service technician so the leak can be located and repaired.
 - * If the boat and motor are to be stored outdoors, make sure all drain plugs are removed, even if the boat is to be covered. Also, never leave outboards with through-hub exhaust in the tilted-up position; make sure they hang vertically. Water and snow can enter through the exhaust and freeze, sometimes expanding enough to crack the gear case.
 - * Batteries should be removed and stored at near-room-temperature. Batteries left unused in cold environments can quickly become discharged and will sulfate, eventually ruining the battery. Even batteries stored at room temperature will normally discharge during periods of use; they should be checked and recharged to maximum capacity periodically.
 - * On stern drives and inboard/outboards a few extra maintenance precautions should be followed in addition to the above steps. They include pulling the stern drive and lubricating the U-joints, checking the gimbal bearings and checking the engine alignment. Cooling systems which use river or lake water should also be drained. "Closed" cooling systems (those with radiators) should be tested for sufficient antifreeze, and the heat exchanger drained.
- "Right now I'm working on a duck hunter's boat," Hoffer said, "and he's let it sit all through the summer without using it. I just took his carburetors apart and the fuel has been gummed up and varnished because of lack of use. Last winter, after his last duck hunt, if he'd have taken some storage precautions he wouldn't have had to do this (have it repaired)."
