

Study group looks at girls

"Our daily bread" is seldom a cotton-soft white loaf these days. People have discovered that breads made of specialty grains and flours are valuable sources of complex carbohydrates, fiber and other nutrients. An Extension homemaker study group leader training will focus on the variety of grains and flours available in the Columbia Basin and ways to use the products in a variety of foods.

Training will take place at the Stokes Landing Center, 195 W. Opal, in Irrigon at 7 p.m. 4-H food projects leaders are especially welcome to attend the leader training. For information, contact instructor Carol Bennett, 676-9642.

Munkers attend Hood River conference

Barry and Mary Ann Munkers of Lexington, attended a "Cooperating for Success" conference Feb. 4, 5 and 6, focusing on the role of farmers and ranchers, farm organizations and cooperatives in improving family farm profits and protecting and enhancing rural quality of life. The conference was held at the Inn at Hood River.

The young farmers and ranchers attending the conference took part in workshops and learning sessions dealing with current agricultural economic and organizational issues, the input of cooperatives and farm organizations on these issues, cooperative practices and the cooperative member role in building a strong agricultural cooperative system.

Among the conference guest speakers were Don Peterson from Harvest States Cooperatives; John Nelson from Farm Credit Services; Randy Smith, orchard owner from Wenatchee and Steve Krupke from Washington State Grange.
