Off the Wall By Marilyn Robinson

Summertime is highlighted by picnics, family reunions and vacations. But sometimes too much family togetherness during a vacation results in a "good to be home" feeling. And I can still relate to the trials of traveling long distances with super active children.

Family vacation travels can often be thrown off schedule by making lots of pit stops. And I laughed when I heard one mother, whose patience had been exhausted by her youngsters, say "We should have dumped them out along the freeway."

Children aren't usually impressed with relationships to people they have never met. And sometimes it's difficult to explain the connection between descendants of two great-grandfathers who were half-brothers. But had it not been for a recent occasion to meet visiting Australian relatives, we would probably have never learned about other Robinsons living much closer to home.

Short-sightedness not only affects our opportunity to become acquainted with others, but it also affects how we think and react. And we often fail to grasp the total picture of our interdependency within a county, state or a nation.

At the local level, I feel that short-sightedness is the reason behind the current flap over how the medical tax dollars are spent. I agree that medical costs are out of reason, but it's taken years to develop better rural health care. Though some of us survived when there were no medical clinics or a hospital within the county, those services, combined with air ambulances, have saved many lives.

We are fortunate to have major industries and utilities that pay a large share of county taxes. And equality in how those tax dollars are spent usually balances out. North end residents who object to supporting a county medical levy should realize that the major part of the sheriff's department expenditures are related to north end activities. Statistics also show more medical tax dollars being spent in the north than in the south.

As the development in the Boardman area continues to grow, that means more road maintenance and development. Meanwhile, small towns everywhere are finding it more difficult to maintain services and utilities under the impact of measure five.

Instead of being divided, we should be thankful to live where there is less stress than in metropolitan areas. But we should be worrying about the impact that the eastern part of the nation is trying to impose on the West. Even when banded together, we become a minority for representation in the nation's Capitol. Over-reactions are causing some drastic measures to be taken that could severely impact our agricultural-based economy.
