Chamber hears Willow Creek campsite plan

Willow Creek Dam campground preliminary site plan

Raul Davila, a civil engineering consultant based in Vancouver, WA., told the Heppner Chamber of Commerce Tuesday plans for the proposed $1 million campsite to be constructed at the Willow Creek Dam.

The plans include 33 tent campsites with full RV hookups and an unobstructed view of Willow Creek Lake, restroom facilities, a garbage disposal area and a path to a day-use boat dock in the cove. Ken Turner, chairman of the Willow Creek Park District, said that the campsite will be built to the Corps of Engineers' standards. "It will be top notch," added Davila.

Turner has been working on the nine-year project for the past six years and Davila, who has his own firm, Contract Administration Services, was hired a year ago to work on the project. Local designer is Jim McElligott.

Davila and Turner say that funding for the project, which will be a combination of federal, state and local funds, in-kind donations and private grants, is looking positive.

Local park designer Jim McElligott

Senator Fawbush talks about legislative plans for measure 5

Wayne Fawbush

State Senator Wayne Fawbush says the legislature will probably mix cuts in state spending, along with some type of new tax proposal, to deal with revenue lost from the passage of measure 5.

Speaking at last week's Chamber of Commerce luncheon, Fawbush said nobody likes new taxes, but he didn't think the state could cut enough to make up for the money lost by the recent property tax limitation. Fawbush, a democrat who has been in politics the last 19 years, is south Morrow County's new senator. He replaces Gene Timms, whose district was moved in the recent redistricting.

Talk of money dominated most of the senator's time at the chamber. Reeling off a list of possible new taxes, from the sales tax to a gross income tax, Fawbush said he wasn't advocating any one of them, but rather laying out the options for Oregonians.

Fawbush said under measure five, the state is required to replace lost local property taxes for kindergarten through high school, but that higher education was left out in the cold. He said he didn't want to see any of the three small colleges in Oregon close, but "it's higher education that's on the chopping block."

A repeal of measure five could have been mounted right after voter approval, Fawbush said, but now he thought it was too late.

"Since passage of measure five the discussion has been expanded to state government efficiency. I don't think we'll see an outright repeal of measure 5. The discussion has been broadened to include education and government reform," he said. Fawbush blames the governor's "conversation with Oregon" for this.

A third generation Oregonian, Fawbush and his wife own and operate a pear orchard in Hood River. He spent 15 years in the legislature before winning the senate seat he has held for the past four years.

In addition to south Morrow County, Fawbush's district also includes counties Baker, Grant, Crook, Wheeler, Gilliam, Sherman, and Hood River, along with portions of Multnomah, Clackamas and Wasco counties.

Gun club shoot results

The Morrow County Gun Club kicked off its annual winter telephonic shoot with a nice sunny Sunday of shooting. A good turnout of trapshooters were present. Rob Ashbeck shot the high score from the 16 yard line with a score of 24 out of a possible 25 targets. Jay Coil was first in the handicap event with a perfect 25 out of 25 targets.

The afternoon was topped off with two Annie Oakley events with Jeff Cutsforth and Jay Coil taking the wins.

The next shoot will be this Sunday, Jan. 19 starting at 12 noon.
