Oregon Together Group shares information tips

The Heppner-Lexington Oregon Together Group would like to share some information about "Alcohol and the Family" that was printed in the CARE/ing Source of July/August of 1991.

Alcohol and the Family: A parent who has an alcoholic spouse has an especially difficult task because both the alcoholic parent's actions and the non-alcoholic parent's reactions often form harmful behavior models for children. These are some ways to help children deal with alcoholism in the home.

* Do not try to hide the problem. Children can cope best when you acknowledge that your spouse is an alcoholic.

* Make sure your children understand that alcoholism is a disease, like cancer or diabetes, and they can hate the disease and still love the sick parent.

* Educate yourself and your children on alcoholism. Understanding takes some of the fear out of the disease.

* Join a group of spouses of alcoholics and help your children find a similar group for children of alcoholics.

* Make sure your children do not feel responsible for the disease or for "binges".

* Try to provide consistency and ritual for your family. Show the children there are some things they can depend on.

"Take time to hug your kids," adds Hoobing. If you are interested in the work of Oregon Together, contact Barb Peterson, Ron Bowman, Doug Rathbun or Rev. Stan Hoobing.

Boardman chamber holds membership drive

Membership in the Boardman Chamber of Commerce has more than doubled as a result of a recent membership drive according to Chamber president Ed Glenn.

Glenn attributes the growth to new industrial firms that have either located in the area recently or who plan to do so in the near future. "Competition between a couple of hard driving membership teams brought those folks into the fold," Glenn said.

The membership drive pitted teams headed by Port of Morrow manager Gary Neal against Dean Kegler of Kegler's Sentry Supermarket. The prize, borrowed from cars salesmen, was a steak and beans luncheon before the entire membership.

Several new industrial plants have opened at the Port of Morrow recently, near the city of Boardman, and several more are planning construction this summer. Boardman Foods, for example, plan to build an onion processing plant this summer and F2M, Inc. a California contractor, is building the wing walls for Bonneville Dam at a Port of Morrow site.

"We welcome those two new companies along with some new members among the folks who have been around town a long time," Glenn said, "with a membership of over 100 now, the Boardman Chamber is poised to become a significant factor in the business community."

The chamber is planning an ambitious celebration of Boardman's 75th Year in 1992 with it's first ever Cinco de Mayo celebration on May 3, a two day Independence celebration July 4 &

5 and a mountain man rendezvous at Pioneer Days, August 29 & 30.

The first event of the year-long birthday party was a Founder's Day Ball in March where a growing collection of historic photographs of the city of Boardman were displayed and the longest continuous resident, Mildred (Mrs. Willard) Baker was honored. Mrs. Baker has lived in Boardman since 1921.

Other events in the series include a Town on Wheels and gum boot parade on July 25 and a much expanded Fishin' Derby, August 8 & 9. "With all these events this year, we'll be frantically looking for hard-working volunteers among those new members," Glenn predicted, and then added, "there will never be a better time to visit Boardman than this year."

Money important marital issue Mini college

"There's no one way to handle money in your marriage. In fact, what you do will change with time. How you handle money is less important than how the financial practices make you feel about yourself and your marriage," says Alice Mills Morrow, Oregon State University (OSU) Extension family economics specialist.

Money is an everyday part of marriage; financial practices and decisions should reflect the philosophy of your relationship and in fact, "enhance the marriage relationship," the specialist adds.

That means you need to understand the philosophy and nature of relationship and make sure you define the terms used. For instance, "sharing" future income and expenses can mean several things.

Sharing could mean that each person pays his or her share of expenses. Sharing could mean that people share income, with each person paying a share of expense proportionate to his or her share of their combined incomes. Sharing might mean that all or most of the income is put into a common fund from which all or most expenses are paid.

Morrow notes that couples often use one of three money management methods.

The "The three pot system" sees each contributing to a household account for joint expenses while maintaining separate accounts for individual expenses.

There's the "two pot system" in which partners keep income separate and each controls his or her individual expenses.

The final approach is the "common pot" in which all income is pooled and distributed according to need.

"The couple that learns to talk about money and resolve their differences, rarely finds money interfering with the relationship," points out Carol Bennett, Morrow County Extension agent.

It's normal for a couple to have different feelings about money, what it means and how it's handled.

"We learn about money from our family, friends and experiences," Bennett notes. "You and your partner have learned different financial values, attitudes and practices that will become evident as you make daily money management decisions and perform daily money management tasks."

Alice Mills Morrow, OSU Extension family economics specialist attorney and a certified financial planner, has observed that differences over money are sometimes a factor in a troubled marriage. She stresses that couples who talk about money and have a financial plan to reach family goals usually find differences easier to resolve.

To help a couple begin talking about money, Bennett suggests that financial discussions can start by using some of the following topics:

Expected income and expenses in the first year;
How are you going to share income and expenses?

Methods of paying bills and keeping records;
Amount of emergency funds necessary;

Items needed to set up the household;
Amounts to spend on gifts, entertainment, recreation;

How much credit to use?
Financial obligations and/or assets each partner brings into the relationship.

As discussions continue it will be important that the couple discuss their long-range goals and financial resources needed to reach those goals. "A clear knowledge of goals makes it easier to allocate resources to reach them. Successful managers think about and plan for the future. They attempt to shape events, rather than letting events shape them.

The OSU Extension Service publication "Financial Planning: Family Goals," EC 1267, can help the new household start developing its long range goals. The publication may be obtained without charge from Morrow County Extension Service, Pettyjohn Office Building, Heppner.

Mini college

Extension mini-college, with an array of nearly 40 classes, special activities and an assembly on "Humor and Health" returns to the Oregon State University campus June 15-18, reports Carol Bennett, OSU Extension agent in Morrow County.

The event, sponsored by the OSU Extension Service and the Oregon Extension Homemakers Council, wasn't held last year so more people could attend the National Extension Homemakers Council meeting in Portland.

"This year's program features a wide variety of classes ranging from estate planning and Oregon history to attracting birds to the backyard and books for children," adds Betty Miner, mini-college coordinator.

"If you've ever wondered what it would be like to go to college, this is your chance to sample campus life," Miner explains, "You'll live in one of OSU's newest residence halls, attend class in Milam Hall, and have a chance to explore the OSU campus at one of the best times of the year."

An added attraction this year is the tentatively scheduled concert by Garth Brooks, one of the country's hottest country western artists. A limited number of tickets have been allocated to mini-college participants and will be for sale once concert arrangements are complete, she adds.

Cost for a full-time mini-college student, including registration, meals and room, range from $146 to $173, depending on room accommodations. There are special rates for people who want to attend one day only.

People planning to attend are urged to register early, Bennett notes, because classes are filled as registrations are received. Registrations received after May 22 will be assessed an additional $10.
