Cloudburst turns street into rivers

Duston Skirlaw stepped in to help Shannon Wicklund Monday afternoon after debris clogged up the drain and water filled up rapidly following a heavy rain storm that caused flooding in areas. Wicklund had been up to her knees in water and tennis shoes when Skirlaw offered to help.

A cloudburst turned Heppner streets into rivers Monday around 2:20 p.m.

In the space of eight to 10 minutes, .99 of an inch of rain fell at the gauge at Cemetery hill. At the city sewer plant, however, only .27 of an inch was recorded and only .15 of an inch measured at Blackhorse.

City hall was deluged with at least an inch of mud, water and sawdust that had been used in the rear of the building as a dike. City employees used shop vacs and carpet cleaners to mop up the building. A disruption of phone services at city hall the following day was also believed to be flood-related.

City officials received reports of flooded basements, gravel and silt washed into streets and driveways and landscape washed away, but said they heard no reports of structural damage.

Roger Ehrmantraut vacuums up water that flooded city hall on Monday following a heavy rain storm. City Hall was filled with about two inches of water.

City enacts dangerous animal ordinance

The Heppner City Council at its May 11 meeting enacted an ordinance which bans wild animals and specifies conditions for licensing certain dangerous animals, such as pit bulls.

Included in the ordinance are American Staffordshire Terriers, bull Terriers, Staffordshire Terriers, American Pit Bull Terriers and mixed breed dogs containing any of these breeds. Also covered by the ordinance are poisonous snakes, non-poisonous snakes that are more than six feet in length, bears, wolverines, badgers, lions, tigers and other members of the cat family other than domestic cats and any amphibians more than one foot in length.

Any person owning or keeping a poisonous or stinging insect or arachnid, pit bull or non-poisonous snakes must obtain a dangerous animal license from city hall. A one-year license will be issued at $100 per animal if all requirements are met, said officials. Seizure, impounding, disposition and penalties for violation of the dangerous animal ordinance were also defined. Fines are set between $250 and $500 for each offense.

Anyone keeping a dangerous animal should stop by city hall for more information and a license.
