County Museum included in congressional report

Morrow County Museum has been selected as one of 12 museums in the United States to be the subject of an on-site information collecting visit and case study. The data collected will form part of a congressionally mandated study on the needs of small, emerging, rural and minority museums.

Dr. Rebecca Danvers, program director for the Institute of Museum Services, a federal agency, visited the Heppner museum on June 5 and discussed with director Marsha Sweek the needs of the Morrow County Museum and how the IMS could serve those needs. The final report, which will be presented to Congress later this year, will combine data from the 12 on-site interviews with the results of a questionnaire provided to 524 museums nationwide. The report will also include information from consultations with over 70 regional, state and national museum associations, two groups of museum professionals representing organizations throughout the country and four discussion groups of six museums each. The discussion groups will be convened in regions throughout the country.

The Morrow County Museum was the recipient of a Conservation Assessment Grant from the Institute of Museum Services in 1991.
