Trotter wins state wool contest

Kimberle Trotter

The Washington and Oregon State Make It Yourself With Wook competition was held on November 14 at the Lloyd Center Red Lion Hotel in Portland. The combined convention of the Washington Wool Growers and the Oregon Sheep Growers Associations witnessed the wool fashion show of 40 winners from throughout Oregon and Washington.

Washington state senior division winner was 24 year old Kimberle (Wright) Trotter, formerly of Heppner, now residing in Vancouver, WA. Kim, the daughter of Ken and Judy Wright of Heppner, added her special designer touches to a long jacket of bordeaux-colored 100 percent wool. On the front and back yokes she added a suede insert, her own original design. A contrasting collar of natural shearing provides an attractive accent. The jacket also features a detachable hood and drawcord at the waste.

Kimberle, a graduate of Bassist College with a degree in fashion design, is employed at Columbia Sportswear in Portland.

Oregon state winners have made the contest a family affair. Carol Shull of Bend won the adult division, her daughter Michal Shull, won the senior division and another daughter, Rachel Shull won the junior division. State director Judy Wright of Heppner says that this is the first time in the history of the Oregon contest that family members have won all three divisions. Michal Shull was a national level finalist in the junior division last year.

Trotter and the Shulls will compete at national finals at Dallas, Tx Jan. 20-23. Wright, who will accompany them, says that their trip to Dallas will include a tour of Mary Kay Cosmetics, a Tex-Mex barbecue and other special events.
