Treatment of Vaginal Candida Infections

Recently in this column, we commented on a report which indicated that urinary tract infections (UTIs) have become the most common bacterial infection reported in the United States. The majority of the eight to ten million office visits made each year for infections of the urinary tract are made by women. An increasing number of women are experiencing UTIs caused by organisms of the Candida family, especially Candida albicans.

The vaginal area contains certain harmless bacteria that keep fungus such as Candida under control. Feminine hygiene sprays, oral antibiotics, and other substances can kill the harmless bacteria, allowing for growth of the fungus. Other factors that may contribute to vaginal candida infections are diabetes, use of systemic steroid medicines, and the presence of a urinary catheter.

A fully developed Candida infection may cause itching and irritation of the vagina or vulva. Other symptoms of a candida infection in adult women include frequency of urination, pain during intercourse, and a thick, white discharge.

The usual drug treatment for this infection is with a vaginal cream or suppository such as clotrimazole or miconazole. One week of the cream or suppository normally is enough to clear the infection. Persistent infections may require the addition of oral antifungal medicines.

1 CARD OF THANKS

Words can't express the gratitude I feel for my many friends who thought of me during my recent surgery and recovery. Thank you for the prayers, phone calls, visits, cards and flowers. They meant more to me than you'll ever know. I'm especially thankful for Drs. Ed and Jeanne Berretta and all the care and encouragement they have given me. We are so lucky to have them and I feel very blessed to be able to live in a community that is as caring as Heppner. Thanks again to everyone for everything that they have done to make my recovery a little easier. May God bless you all.
